Paris, Jan. 19. — Authoritative sources tonight reported the American tanker Nantucket Chief had been captured by two Spanish insurgent gunboats off Barcelona Tuesday.

These sources declared the capture occurred while the American tanker was attempting to run insurgent Generalissimo Franco's blockade of the eastern Spanish coast.

The tanker, formerly named the Gulflight, was en route to the Catalan capital with a cargo of Russian oil.

The capture was witnessed by French warships which declined to interfere. They reported the incident to the French navy ministry, however, the same source said.

French reports said the tanker was last seen being escorted by the insurgent vessels to Palma, Mallorcan Island stronghold of the insurgent sea and air forces.

(Lloyd's shipping register lists the 5,189 tanker Gulflight, of Port Arthur, Tex., as owned by the Gulf Oil Corporation.)

Barcelona, Spain, Jan. 19.—Six black rebel bombers today zoomed over Barcelona and Valencia, the most crowded Mediterranean cities of loyalist Spain, and piled streets with between 700 and 1,000 dead, including hundreds of women and children.

It was the worst extermination of noncombatants in this "little world war" that has raged for 18 months and where there have been no boundaries to the battlefronts.

The loyalist defense ministry listed 520 dead and countless wounded in Barcelona alone after 95 seconds of explosive horror, in which 11 huge bombs scored 11 direct hits from an altitude of 10,000 feet that mocked antiaircraft fire.

The slaughter and destruction in Valencia, down the Levant coast, was described as even greater.

This emergency capital of loyalist Spain saw the bombers at 12:15 p. m., as hundreds of old men, women and children took advantage of the clear weather for promenades.

A minute and a half later large areas of the city were a shambles. Big apartment buildings lay in

Lunch Fund Needs $35,000 to Continue

Citizens' Permanent Committee Warns WPA and School Board the Program Will End Wednesday Unless More Cash Is Forthcoming.

Unless $35,000 is obtained immediately and from some source not now in sight, Washington's needy school children will receive free lunches only through next Wednesday, it was learned last night.

The Citizens' Permanent Committee, formed to see the lunch program through this school year and insure its continuation in years to come, yesterday notified the WPA and the District Board of Education it could make no more food purchases.

On January 6 the committee sponsored the Velvet Ball as part of its lunch fund procedure. The ball was the largest and most brilliant charity ball possibly ever held in Washington, but expenses ate up the proceeds, and probably ran the committee deeply into debt. No audit of the event has been released.

Mrs. John Boyle, jr. chairman of the committee, appeared before the Board of Education yesterday and urged Congress be asked to make a deficiency appropriation that would insure the program until the close of school.

The board shifted responsibility in the matter by declaring free lunches to be "no matter associated with education."

Superintnedent Frank W. Ballou said the District Commissioners would be advised of the need and asked to "take such steps as it may think necessary or desirable."

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen said last night: "The Districe does not have a cent which we could apply to the program. We will consider the matter at our meeting Friday, but my personal feeling is

Lynch Bill's Foes Gaining Western Aid

8 Democrats Slated to Reconsider Stand as Filibuster Rages.

Norris May Back Move to Sidetrack Law in Near Future.

By Robert C. Albright.

Unexpected aid from the West yesterday brought new strength to the South's Senate fight to sidetrack anti-lynching legislation. At the same time, seldom-used parliamentary rules were invoked by party leaders to break the sectional filibuster.

Word that Senator George W. Norris, Nebraska's Independent Republican, will support a motion to lay the bill aside in the near future was passed through the ranks of embattled Southerners, who for two weeks have held out against the bill.

Norris, a former friend of the measure, would not discuss the report, but commented: "I might do just that."

Meanwhile, it was learned eight Western Democrats, former friends of the bill, will meet next week to reconsider their position. One of their number, who declined to be quoted, said they planned to advise the majority leadership the bill should be laid aside if it promises to tie up business indefinitely.

Borah Turns Tide.

Should the liberal Norris and some other Western colleagues follow the progressive William E. Borah, of Idaho, in flat opposition to the bill, leading Southern opponents declared it would be "as good as licked." Borah's strong Senate speech against the legislation is regarded by many as the turning point in the fight, in which the South is outnumbered but apparently determined not to yield.

But it was the Administration's ace man from the South—Vice President John Nance Garner—who yesterday served notice on the Senate that he will adhere to the letter of the chamber's rules to prevent dilatory tactics lengthening debate.

As a result, no Senator will be permitted to speak more than twice on one subject in one legislative day. (One legislative day may extend for weeks if the anti-lynching bill continues before the Senate.)

Quorum Calls Barred.

Any Senator who yields to a colleague for anything but a question will lose the floor. This ruling alone will stop the practice of yielding for repeated quorum calls, which for two weeks past have kept Senators on the run.

Senator Tom Connally, of Texas, opposition floor manager, appeared undismayed at the Garner ruling. Pointing out that every amendment to the bill constitutes a "new subject," on which each Senator can make two additional speeches, he said the opposition fight would not be hampered.

Diminutive Senator Allen J. Ellender, of Louisiana, former trusted

Two Mattson Children to See Ross Suspect

G-Men Seek to Connect Anders to Death of Tacoma Boy.

By the Associated Press.

Tacoma, Jan. 19.—Dr. W. W. Mattson said today Federal Bureau of Investigation agents had transported William Mattson, jr., 16, and Muriel Mattson, 14, away from their home here presumably to attempt to identify Peter Anders as the kidnap-killer of their brother, Charles.

Dr. Mattosn refused to disclose whether the children had been taken to San Francisco, or whether they had viewed Anders at some other point. He said he did not know where the children had been taken, or for what purpose.

The physician whose son was kidnaped from the family home here December 27, 1936, said that "the children are frequently out of school and have been take various places by Federal agents at various times."

(At San Francisco today the Call-Bulletin said it learned the two Mattson children and a playmate, Virginia Chatfield, were brought here by plane to view Anders, and had said he was not the man who abducted Charles. The three children were present December 27, 1936, when young Charles was kidnaped.)

Dr. Mattson declined to say when the children left their home here or when they were expected to return. He asserted he did not know whether a report Muriel and Wil-

Footprints Hint Humans on Earth Millions of Years

Berea, Ky., Jan. 19 (AP).—Discovery of footprints in sandstone, so human in appearance that they may have been made by one of the earliest ancestors of man, was announced here today by Dr. Wilbur Greely Burroughs, head of the department of geology of Berea College.

The tracks, 10 in all, Dr. Burroughs said, are about 150 feet above the bottom of the Pottsville formation of the upper carboniferous system. He added that if further investigations bear out present indications the tracks would indicate that the origin of man goes back millions of years beyond the earliest time dreamed of. Dr. Burroughs said he felt certain the sand deposit was not of a later date.

There were distinct right and left foot tracks, Dr. Burroughs said, and everything indicated the creature that made them walked on only two feet.

Inch and Half Of Snow Covers Capital Streets

First Heavy Fall of Season Tangles Traffic, Gives Children Treat.

(Pictures on Pages 12 and 17.)

Washington's first snowstorm of the winter laid a dazzling carpet of white over the District last night, knotted traffic and brought to sport-hungry youngsters and grown-ups an afternoon and evening of coasting, long denied.

The snow, which had its origin in the mountains of southwestern Virginia and northeastern Tennessee, swirled into the District yesterday morning at 11:30 o'clock, and by 9:45 p. m., when it stopped an inch and a half had been recorded. The fall was general in Maryland and Virginia.

As the Weather Bureau predicted possible light snow and slowly rising temperatures for today, more than 20 minor auto accidents were reported as a result of the glazed streets and semi-blinding flurries. Four persons slipped and fell, injuring themselves, but no major traffic accidents were reported.

All police scout and squad cars were ordered to drive with caution by Inspector L. I. H. Edwards.

Airlines operating in and out of Washington Airport reported plane movements had been almost normal throughout the day, despite a low ceiling. Officials said they expected to continue on schedule last night unless the snow became much heavier.

Washington's lowest temperature yesterday was 19, recorded at 7 a. m., with a high of 24 at 1:30 in the afternoon. Today, the forecaster said, a low of about 23 will be recorded before dawn. There is some possibility, he added, the snow may turn to rain.

Merry shouts rang on glittering streets and highways late last night as thousands of children—and adults, too—coasted and hurled snowballs.

Automobile chains clanked on icy streets. The Capital Transit Co. puts its snow plows into action, and all streetcars were running on schedule.

2-Hr. Bar Extension For Birthday Ball Doomed in Capital

Prospects that celebrants at the President's Birthday Ball would be able to stay at the bar until two hours after Saturday midnight were shattered yesterday by the House District Committee.

After tentatively reporting favorably the Dirksen bill to extend the week-end closing of bars until 2 a. m. Sunday, the committee voted, 7 to 3, to table the measure.

Representative Wood (Democrat), Missouri, a labor spokesman, led the successful fight on the bill on the ground that liberalization of the liquor laws would bring back prohibition.

U. S. Must End Isolation to Act for Peace, Mrs. Roosevelt Asserts at Conference on War

By Jessie Ash Arndt.
The Post Club Editor.

Leadership for peace among nations does not come through isolation, Mrs. Roosevelt told members of the Conference on the Cause and Cure of War at their banquet in the Washington Hotel last night. It is based upon "foresight, study, understanding, sympathy and what we think the principle of world behavior should be."

The First Lady, introduced by Miss Josephine Schain, chairman of the Committee on the Cause and Cure of War, declared she hoped she would "never see us go to war for any reason whatsoever; but more than this, that we would never grow soft about our principles."

"We must pay a price for international peace," she declared, "and we may have to pay a good deal of a price to uphold the principles of honesty and justice to which we hope to draw all nations."

Urging that young people be brought to a realization of the necessity for developing machinery by which nations can work together, Mrs. Roosevelt asserted that when we become isolated it tends to impair our ability to help other nations.

"We are more willing, as a Nation, to draw away to ourselves than to go out, and there is the danger," she said. "If we have peace, we must have machinery to draw us together and we must attack problems before they reach the point where people want to go to war about them.

"We must be willing to look at others' problems and study them in their relation to our own economy and our own lives. We must bring people to the realization they must deal fairly and honestly with each other."

Recalling the first conference, on which she was a member of the findings committee—a committee

Lilienthal Hints at Plan for Purchasing Private Utility Firms.

Insurance Official Hits Investor Loss

Senate Told Delay on Dam Project Will Cause 'Waste.'

By Sidney Olson.

The continuing struggle centering about the Tennessee Valley Authority brought six developments on the utility front in rapid succession yesterday:

Representative Andrew J. May, chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, and a TVA opponent, made public a letter from an unnamed official of a Middle Western life insurance company which contended that the TVA had adversely affected utility investors.

David E. Lilienthal, a TVA director, said last night "the door is open" for further negotiation between the Government and Commonwealth and Southern Corporation on Federal and municipal purchases of some of that company's properties.

His statement came several hours after a White House luncheon conference with the President, and strengthened the possibility that Lilienthal may confer with Wendell L. Willkie, Commonwealth and Southern president, later this week.

The Senate Appropriations Committee was warned by TVA officials further delay in building the TVA's $112,000,000 Gilbertsville, Ky., dam would "introduce inefficiency and waste" into the construction program.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals here dissolved injunctions obtained by the Alabama Power Co. against construction of five municipal power projects in Alabama, clearing the way for further development.

Randall J. LeBoeuf, jr., of New York, an attorney for the Carolina Aluminum Co., revealed here that the company is considering appealing to Federal courts against a recent Federal Power Commission decision holding a Federal license necessary for a proposed $6,000,000 hydro-electric plant at Tuckertown, N. C.

Senator Kenneth McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, told the Senate he will take the floor at the earliest opportunity to reply to a speech made Monday by Senator H. Styles Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire, asserting TVA was operated for the benefit primarily of a favored few large corporations, instead of consumers.

From another source it was reported Morgan merely had stopped off in Washington en route to a vacation in the South.

Business Ideas for Recovery

Text of statement read by Chairman W. Averell Harriman, of the Business Advisory Council, in a conference with President Roosevelt yesterday:

We are keenly appreciative, Mr. President, of this opportunity to discuss with you the matters which affect the business situation and, therefore, the economic welfare of the people of the country. At our dinner in honor of Secretary Roper in Chicago you extended to us the invitation to meet with you and discuss ways and means that could be employed to improve the welfare of that portion of our population who have the lowest incomes. This is a subject we are indeed glad to have an opportunity to discuss. On the other hand, we cannot help but be deeply concerned at the present time over the economic welfare of the entire Nation and believe that through co-operation it can be bettered.

Since extending to us this invitation, you have asked in your message to Congress that business and finance recognize that there is a new moral climate in America and "to cure such inequalities as they can cure without legislation, but to join their Government in the enactment of legislation where the ending of abuses and the steady functioning of our economic life call for Government assistance."

The members of this council wish to re-pledge to you our acceptance of this responsibility and to assure you that we stand ready to function in the manner which you have indicated insofar as we are able.

Wages and Hours.

An example is the proposed wage and hour legislation. A year ago we pledged to you our co-operation in the development of sound legislation in this field. There was proposed in Congress a bill which went very much further in Federal control of wages and hours than is indicated by your message to Congress of January 3.

It is true that this original proposed bill was materially modified, but as has been indicated by the Congressional debate, the bill has aroused much opposition, even from

Industrialist Says Capital Cut Of 50 Billions Blocks Recovery

U.S. Underfinanced and Present Taxes Prevent Recouping, Baldwin Works Chief Tells Senate Hearing; Duke Heiress' Husband Testifies.

By the Associated Press.

A Congressional Tax Committee heard George H. Houston, Philadelphia industrialist, assert yesterday that never in its history has the Nation been confronted with "such a deficiency of resources in facilities of production and exchange."

Houston, president of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, said the deficiency was a result of a $50,000,000,000 reduction since 1929 in surpluses and capital of both incorporated and unincorporated businesses.

"Never has business been as poorly financed, in relation to the need for goods and services, as it is now," he said.

He spoke at hearings on a tax revision program that would modify the undistributed profits and capital gains levies and make many more changes in the revenue laws.

Any tax that "forces dissipation of corporate savings" or limits discretion of business men, Houston said, "is looking straight to the destruction of private enterprise."

The undistributed profits and capital gains taxes, he contended, have led to imprudent disbursements of profits, discouraged reinvestment of profits in improvements and added nothing to the stability of business.

Changes under consideration by the committee, he said, would make the tax law "much better" than it now is.

From James H. R. Cromwell, whose wife, the former Doris Duke, inherited a fortune made from tobacco, the committee received a

House Sub-Committee Adopts District Income Tax Program

By James D. Secrest.

A District income tax cleared the first hurdle yesterday as a House sub-committee adopted it, but it faced a rocky road ahead both before the full District Committee and in the House.

Over the objections of Chairman Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, the sub-committee on fiscal affairs voted, 3 to 1, for a three-point tax program, comprising the following:

An income tax that would be levied against all income earned in the District, including members of Congress, Federal employes and persons who maintain legal residences in the States.

Renewal of the business privilege tax of two-fifths of 1 per cent on gross receipts.

Continuation of the 25-cent increase in the real estate and personal property tax to $1.75.

Nichols later announced he would fight the tax program both in committee and on the House floor, if the full committee sustain the sub-committee. At the same time he predicted the House would reject the income tax as it did last year.

"I am going to fight first against the inclusion of more than two of the three taxes in the bill," Nichols

Leaders of Nation Urge Roosevelt Take Lead to End Uncertainty.

Advisory Council Pledges Support

White House Expresses General Approval, Says Secretary.

By Franklyn Waltman.

Leaders of American business, gathered together as the Business Advisory Council for the Commerce Department, yesterday formally and specifically called on President Roosevelt to assume the leadership in eradicating uncertainties as to the future course of his Administration.

That was the epitome of a long statement unanimously adopted by 49 members of the Business Advisory Council and read to Mr. Roosevelt by their chairman, W. Averell Harriman, in a White House conference which lasted 90 minutes.

Although noting several exceptions to what the group told him, President Roosevelt expressed general approval of the statement, according to his secretary, Stephen T. Early.

The latter quoted Mr. Roosevelt as saying his aim was the establishment of simple machinery in respect to policies, representative of all elements in the national economy. That was taken to mean creation of an enlarged advisory group to assist the Administration in fostering better relations between Government and business.

Ask End of Abuses.

Contending nothing would do more to restimulate the country's depressed industries, the business group urged that a way be found to eliminate abuses of electrical utility holding companies without crippling that industry, and that "a sound policy be developed as the basis of relations between Government and private enterprise to the end that the fear of destruction through Government competition may be eliminated."

Remarking that private capital has failed to flow normally into the development of industry, the council asserted "the great body of investors of the country, large and small, need reassurance as to the direction reform is to take."

"It is of the essence," their statement asserted, "that the public know what forms of business organization meet with the approval of the Administration and are to be encouraged in their development, and what are to be affected by reform."

Council's Suggestions.

Specifically the council urged postponement of wage and hour legislation pending further study; modification of the undistributed profits and capital gains taxes; a balanced budget; no further pump priming or dollar devaluation and legislation defining responsibility of labor organizations.

At the same time the council applauded the Roosevelt housing program, the President's recent remarks regarding railroads; his advocacy of regularization of employment by industry and his objectives in the fields of public utilities, holding companies and monopoly.

Thus the statement was friendly in tone in an unusual degree and freely pledged co-operation of the business world to the President. Nevertheless, the council clearly pointed out to the President policies which it disapproved and asked him to "give us the leadership around which we can all rally."

Mr. Roosevelt, in turn, was said to have given these contentions a sympathetic understanding and in commenting on holding companies conceded that some were in the public interest because of mass

Lewis Assails WPA Ousters Under Idle Law

'Government Is Receding From Responsibility,' Says C. I. O. Chief.

Removal by the Works Progress Administration from its relief rolls of workers receiving unemployment compensation drew sharp criticism yesterday from John L. Lewis.

Lewis wrote Acting WPA Administrator Aubrey Williams:

"By this order the Government is simply further receding from the responsibility which the President has said it must assume to provide work for the unemployed, and receding on what seems to us a completely inadequate excuse."

"Purposes Impaired."

Asserting that "the purposes of the social security act are impaired by this order," Lewis urged its suspension until labor and unemployed representatives could be heard.

The order will mean, he said, that "persons who desperately need funds they receive from WPA employment will be without any income at all for a large portion of the three to six weeks of the waiting period for unemployment benefits" because they are to be taken from relief rolls as soon as they are eligible for jobless compensation.

163,000 Dropped.

By the Associated Press.

The tide of receding business washed approximately 163,000 persons off payrolls in Michigan between July 15, 1937, and January 15 of this year, William Haber, former State relief director, told the Senate Unemployment Committee yesterday.

He estimated the unemployed on the latter date was 376,000, or 18 per cent of the State's gainfully employed population.

On the other hand, Louis Nims, Michigan Works Progress Administration director, said 7,000 of approximately 20,500 persons called to WPA jobs since December 1 had failed to report. Nims said delays the prospective WPA works faced in obtaining State identification numbers might have been a contributing cause.

105,000 Eligible.

"In Pennsylvania there are 105,000 persons eligible for WPA aid who cannot be put on the rolls because the quota of 193,000 already is filled," J. B. Hudson, State WPA director, testified.

David Lasser, president of the Workers' Alliance of America, charged in a letter to Byrnes, that the alliance had been denied an opportunity to testify.

Meanwhile, the Treasury revealed the social security and railroad retirement programs cost, up to January 1, $294,681,343 more than the income from the taxes imposed to finance them. Expenditures were given as $960,975,659 and receipts $666,294,316, but it was emphasized such a condition was not to be considered permanent.

The Labor Department reported 1,162,000 persons in 21 States and the District of Columbia filed claims for such insurance during the first week.

Politics and People

Prevailing Wage Requirement in Housing Bill Regarded as Revolutionary Step.

By Franklyn Waltman

IF you have a good memory you will remember that on November 29 last year President Roosevelt said before Congress a housing program which he presented as an effective stimulant against the economic recession. You also will recall that prior to the Christmas holidays both House and Senate passed bills with slight variations, embodying the President's proposals—and these bills were sent to conference for reconciliation of the differences.

WALTMAN.

Well, those bills are still in conference almost one month later. Neither the Administration nor Congress seems to be in any hurry whatever to get this legislation passed and to get going the housing program which was designed to contribute so much to setting off recovery again. Meanwhile, none in the housing construction industries knows with certainty under what kind of terms he will be able to do business this year.

It is this sort of thing which proves so troublesome to business, particularly when a group of left-wing New Dealers commence spreading propaganda to the effect that the Administration has lost faith in efforts to stimulate private enterprise in housing construction and must engage in building subsidized housing at an outlay of $1,000,000,000 or more in the next year.

And as the housing bill has languished in committee not one word has come publicly from the Administration in condemnation of the prevailing wage amendment which Senator Henry Cabot Lodge so artfully and with such Machiavellian shrewdness persuaded the Senate to insert into that measure. And yet the amendment would nullify not only the President's housing program if left in the measure, but would wreck the entire system of Federal insurance for home mortgages.

As was revealed in this place on December 23, the Lodge amendment, requiring payment of the prevailing wage on all construction covered by Federal insurance, would make it impossible for the Federal Housing Administration to function. At the same time it was pointed that, assuming that agency could function, the gain to labor under the Lodge amendment would be dubious.

As serious as the effect of the Lodge amendment on the FHA and the housing program would be, it has still more serious implications. It constitutes a revolutionary legislative device for freezing wage rates in private enterprise. Heretofore, the statutory requirement for payment of prevailing wages has never been imposed on private enterprise—its application has been restricted to public bodies such as Federal, State and municipal governments.

When the Senate so willingly accepted the Lodge amendment it apparently did so in the belief it was adhering to precedents previously established and unthinkingly voted as a matter of course. Actually it smashed all precedents, for previously Congress had applied the prevailing wage requirement only to spending of public money. In the housing bill it voted to apply it to spending of private money.

There was some merit in previous Congressional action requiring the Federal government to pay a prevailing wage. In the first place, it is an accepted principle that labor cannot strike against the government. Secondly, the government is an all-powerful employer and can in large degree control wages arbitrarily, if it so desires. Thirdly, the prevailing wage requirement chiefly has been used in connection with undertakings to relieve unemployment—thus the workers had no alternative but to accept what the government or its contractors offered.

Such a case, however, cannot be made out for imposing a prevailing wage on private enterprise—and certainly not in the housing construction field. Labor in that industry is well and strongly organized. It can protect its wage rates and, indeed, has succeeded in getting them economically too high. In the building industry there are a multitude of employers for whom labor may work.

Collective bargaining is highly developed in the building industry. But under the Lodge amendment, please note, the Senate throws collective bargaining out of the window. It places a ban on a building trades union and a large builder from sitting down and entering into a contract that the latter will pay the former so much for a year's work—unless that amount is at least the prevailing wage of the community.

How is that conclusion reached? By simply taking cognizance of the fact that the FHA would be forbidden to insure a loan on any property in the construction of which the prevailing wage was not paid. Since the FHA would not insure such loans, building and loan associations, life insurance companies, banks and trust companies—the principal institutional sources of funds on which the housing program must rely—will not make such loans. Without loans, there will be little housing building.

Aside from all of that, however, where will this sort of thing stop, now that the line into private enterprise is being crossed by prevailing wage advocates? If the Lodge amendment is a sound provision for housing construction, why would not statutory imposition of prevailing wages be good for all other industries?

Why should not Congress amend the Federal Reserve act so as to provide that all persons and corporations whose loans are discounted by Federal Reserve banks must pay the prevailing wage of their communities? Why should not the Farm Credit Administration be required to insist that all farmers to whom Federal Land banks advance money pay their farm hands the prevailing wage of their county? Why should national banks be permitted to lend to businesses which do not pay the prevailing wage or fail to measure up to some other standard which appeals to Congress?

We cannot help thinking that housing under the Roosevelt Administration remains a football of politics.

P.R.R. Violated Law in Stock Deal, U. S. Says

1931 Purchase of Raritan Shares From Holding Company Cited.

By the Associated Press.

Senate investigators asserted yesterday a stock transaction between the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and Pennroad Corporation in 1931 violated Federal law.

They submitted evidence to the Senate Railroad Finance Committee which, they contended, showed the Clayton act, an anti-monopoly law, was violated in Pennsylvania's purchase of Raritan River Railroad stock from Pennroad, a holding company.

The Clayton act prohibits certain transactions between corporations having directors, or officers, in common. Committee records showed that at the time of the Raritan stock sale, 6 of the 11 members on the Pennroad board of directors were members of the Pennsylvania board.

C. S. Heiserman, general counsel for Pennsylvania at the time the sale was made, declined to express an opinion as to its legality.

Earlier Senator Truman (Democrat), acting chairman of the committee, asserted the Central Railroad of New Jersey had "technically violated" the law by "concealing facts" from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Rail Rate Cut Asked.

By the Associated Press.

The National Coal Association proposed to the Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday a revision of railroad rates on the basis of "prudent investment," as President Roosevelt has suggested for utility rates.

Henry J. Saunders, speaking for the coal association, asserted the present railroad rate basis was "at least 25 per cent too high." He estimated "inflation and watered stock" would be 70.36 per cent of the value arrived at by economists of the Association of American Railroads.

Pa. Anthracite Lands Set at $200,000,000

By the Associated Press.

W. Jett Lauck, chairman of the Pennsylvania Anthracite Commission, estimated yesterday that Federal purchase of anthracite coal lands would require an outlay of $200,000,000 to $250,000,000 on an investment basis.

Lauck said that under a plan proposed by Gov. Earle, of Pennsylvania, coal reserves purchased by the Government would be under jurisdiction of the Interior Department.

Senators Hint Move to Block Seating of Milton, Hague Aide

Norris Thinks Effort Will Be Made But Will Not Lead Attack; Barkley Denies He Has Heard of Plan.

By the Associated Press.

Talk developed in the Senate late yesterday of an effort to block the seating of John Milton as a New Jersey Senator but some Senators predicted he would be seated without difficulty.

Senator Norris (Independent), Nebraska, ardent Administration supporter, said he thought some effort might be made to prevent Milton from taking the oath of office but said he would not lead such a movement.

[Carl Holderman, State chairman of Labor's Non-Partisan League, asked United States Senators last night to investigate the record of Milton, the Associated Press reported in Passaic. In telegrams to Senator Barkley and Senator Norris, Holderman said he felt certain an investigation of Milton's connection with the Democratic organization of Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City would reveal a "bar to the seating of Milton."—Editor's note.]

Milton, legal adviser to Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City, was appointed to the Senate Tuesday by A. Harry Moore, who resigned his Senate seat to become Governor of New Jersey.

Norris said he had read reports Milton was allied with Hague's powerful New Jersey political organization and added that everything he had heard about the appointee thus far had been unfavorable.

The Nebraska Senate pointed out the Senate may judge the qualifications of its own members and that if it wished it could refer Milton's appointment to a committee for study.

Senator Barkley, of Kentucky, Democratic leader, said he knew of no move to prevent Milton's seating. Barkley expressed the view that criticism could not be directed against Milton because of any association he may have had with Hague. The majority leader explained that any challenge of Milton's right to the seat would have to be based on the past record of Milton himself.

Fight on C. I. O. Cited.

Senator Pepper (Democrat), Florida, an Administration supporter, asserted that "if any evidence against him is presented to the Senate, I would give it the consideration I thought it ought to receive."

One Senator said privately that if it were demonstrated Milton shared Hague's antagonism to the Committee for Industrial Organization, he would vote for an investigation. Hague's fight against the C. I. O. has received Nation-wide attention and has led to controversy.

Senator Lodge (Republican), Massachusetts, asserted, however, it would be "tyrannical" for the Senate to consider denying Milton a seat. The only concern of the Senate, he said, was to ascertain that Moore's appointment of Milton was in order.

Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, predicted that Milton would be seated without difficulty.

Milton Refuses Comment.

Jersey City, N. J., Jan. 19 (AP).—John Milton, Jersey City lawyer, refused to comment today on a statement by Senator Norris (Independent), of Nebraska, that there may be a move in the Senate to prevent Milton from succeeding A. Harry Moore as Senator.

Mayor Frank Hague, State Democratic leader and a close friend of Milton, left after Moore's inauguration in Trenton yesterday for a Florida resort to visit a sister, Miss Mary Hague, who is ill.

Moore said he would accompany Milton to Washington Monday, there to present him as Moore's successor in the Senate.

Kirkpatrick Is Elected Group Health President

Resignation of William F. Penniman as president of Group Health Association, Inc., and election of William C. Kirkpatrick as his successor were announced yesterday by the board of trustees. Pressure of his duties as an assistant general manager of the Home Owners Loan Corporation was given as the reason for Penniman's resignation. The new president is supervisor of the HOLC tax section.

Union Chief Gives Copeland Apology

By the Associated Press.

Robert J. Fitzgerald, maritime union leader, denied yesterday any intention to reflect on the character of Senator Copeland (Democrat), New York, in describing as "lying statements" reports made public by Copeland that the crew of the S. S. President Hoover was drunk and abused passengers.

Fitzgerald was summoned to appear before the Senate Commerce Committee, which is conducting hearings on proposed amendments to the 1936 merchant marine act, to explain a telegram signed by him and placed in the record.

Mayor Joseph K. Carson, of Portland, testified that shipping tie-ups on the Pacific Coast within the last three years had cost that area a billion dollars.

French Cabinet Pledges People Cannon, Butter

New Social Security Laws Are Part of Chautemps Government's Aims.

By the United Press.

Paris, Jan. 19.—Premier Camille Chautemps' day-old government announced tonight that it will embark immediately on a parliamentary program providing "both cannons and butter."

Georges Bonnet, former finance minister whose resignation threat and demands for monetary freedom precipitated the downfall of Chautemps' popular front cabinet last Friday, announced the policy while the premier drafted a statement to be placed before Parliament Friday afternoon. Chautemps promised new social security laws designed to hold together the Peoples Front.

Bonnet is minister of state in the new cabinet and he will be responsible for co-ordinating economic and financial affairs.

"Technically there is nothing wrong with our financial situation today," Bonnet said, speaking before heads of France's export industries which have been engulfed by the six-day crisis that plunged the franc to new lows and sent frightened capital abroad. He said:

"If I and the new government are opposed to exchange control, it is not only because it would terminate our financial liberties but because it would permit, through camouflaged inflation, the redistribution of part of the nation's wealth.

"That was no solution. In neighboring countries the populaton has to choose between cannons and butter. Here in France we want both cannons and butter and a program is being prepared to provide both."

As Bonnet made his announcement the Communists and a section of the Socialists organized for a parliamentary attack on the new government.

Although the People's Front is badly shattered, it was indicated tonight that he would carry the vote of confidence by a maximum of 407 votes against an opposition of not more than 199.

CIO Leaders Drop Plan to Unite All Maritime Unions

San Francisco, Jan. 19 (AP).—C. I. O. maritime union leaders today conceded inability at present to form a closely knit national organization and decided to try the next best thing—a council of "free" units.

Delegates to the national unity conference were told absence of "one spoke in the wheel" forestalled plans to establish a national union composed of sailors, marine firemen and marine cooks and stewards—prime object of their meeting.

Although they did not name the absent "spoke," observers believed they referred to the powerful Sailors Union of the Pacific, which recently decided not to affiliate with either the C. I. O. or the A. F. L.

Scrawl on Paper Ruled Signature Of Shakespeare

Salt Lake City, Jan. 19 (AP).—The Shakespeare laboratory of the University of Utah announced today it had authenticated a hitherto unknown signature of William Shakespeare.

Six other signatures of the English dramatist exist. The seventh, subject of 19 months of research by Prof. B. Roland Lewis, is four inches long on a piece of paper eight by two inches, apparently cut off an old document.

Prof. Lewis said "$75,000 has been paid for Shakespeare objects of less value."

Foreman of Jury Stricken at Trial

Pittsburgh, Jan. 19 (AP).—Foreman Samuel Carlow, 39, retired with a jury to deliberate the case of George Pedosky, 48, today, then slumped in a chair with an attack of heart disease. At a hospital he could not remember being a juror or any of the testimony.

Pedosky, who testified he beat Carl Lukas, 52, to death with an iron pipe in self-defense, will get a new trial.

Accused in Bigamy Indictment

Perjury and bigamy were charged in an indictment voted yesterday by a Toledo, Ohio, grand jury against Mrs. Melba Levin Rubin (left) and Bernard A. Boggio. They were accused of using fictitious names and contracting a bigamous marriage May 17, 1937. Boggio recently resigned as chief assistant prosecutor at Detroit.

All Egypt Gorges on Mutton On Eve of Boy King's Wedding

Farouk to Take 'Most Beautiful Queen Since Cleopatra' in Ancient Ritual Which Commoner Bride Cannot Attend.

By the United Press.

Cairo, Egypt, Jan. 19.—Thousands of Egyptians were encamped in tent cities on Cairo's outskirts tonight, feasting on ten tons of mutton delivered from the palace and awaiting the spectacle of tomorrow's royal wedding that will give the Nile its "most beautiful queen since Cleopatra."

The "boy king," Farouk, who will be 18 in two weeks, will marry Sainaz Zulficar, whom he calls "Farida," 17-year-old daughter of a commoner, in the Mohammedan ritual that excludes all women from the ceremony—even the bride.

The ceremony, at Koubbeh Palace, will be the first wedding of a ruling monarch of Egypt since the days of the Pharaohs, and the couple will be the first independent sovereigns of Egypt in four centuries.

Instead of standing before an altar with Farouk, Farida will wait in an adjoining room while Yousef Zulficar Pasha, her father, goes to the temple and signs a marriage contract.

Farouk's wedding will be expensive for, in addition to a big, but secret, dowry to his bride's father, he must provide a feast for all the poor and entertain his thousands of "guests" pouring into Cairo tonight by means of reduced rail and bus fares. Cairo will be turned over to these guests for three days.

Even pickpockets, imbued by the spirit of the occasion, have written to newspapers that they will abstain from stealing during the celebration.

Tomorrow, a play, the music for which was written by Mrs. Ruth Deyo, an American, will be presented.

After the final state banquet Sunday night, Farouk and Farida will leave early Monday for their honeymoon at Inchass.

King Opposes New District Airport Plan

Says He Understood That Roosevelt Favored Two Flying Fields.

Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, chairman of the defunct Washington Airport Commission, yesterday announced his disapproval of the new Distrcit airport plan that includes the scrapping of the Camp Springs site, which his commission recommended.

"When I put my hand to the plow, I plow a straight furrow," he said.

"And I don't like these people who go about sticking knives in bills that they have agreed to support."

King's statement presaged a fight on the new Gravelly Point bill just as hearings were scheduled to start tomorrow morning before the House Committee on Public Buildings and Public Grounds.

Senator King said that he had conferred with Speaker Bankhead and Representative Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, a member of the commission, in an effort to get House action on the Camp Springs airport bill.

The Camp Springs measure was adopted by the Senate last summer but held up in the House. Only last week President Roosevelt indicated he was ready to scrap the commission's proposal and called into conference the two House champions of Gravelly Point and Washington Airport—Representative Smith (Democrat), of Virginia, and Nichols.

"We had some of the finest expert advice available," King explained, "and we selected Camp Springs on their advice."

Senator King said that his understanding of the President's statement when he vetoed the bill to close Military road in Washington Airport was that he favored two airports instead one.

"I understood that he favored Camp Springs," he said, "but wanted an auxiliary airport, such as Gravelly Point, closer to the Capital."

While he did not state what he intended to do, Senator King said he would fight the Smith bill vigorously if it reaches the Senate.

Tavern in Ozarks Serves as Church Half-Hour Nightly

Marquand, Mo., Jan. 19 (AP).—The Rev. Noel Bremner, Ozarks Mountain Nazarene minister, reported success today for revivals he holds nightly in a tavern while beer sales are suspended half an hour.

"The tavern becomes a church the minute I place on the walls a sign I have hand-printed which reads 'Church of the Nazarene,'" Bremner explained.

Ozarkians come from miles around to sit on tables, on the floor, even on the bar and listen while the music box stops and patrons set their beer aside. Half an hour of religion, then bartender Murphy Meyers' place becomes a tavern again.

Bills Held Menace To Citizens' Rights

Three dangerous bills now are pending in Congress which threaten to overthrow liberties of the American people and destroy every semblance of free speech and free press, Prof. C. S. Longacre, secretary, religious liberty department of Seventh-Day Adventist, said yesterday.

One measure is for a reform calendar with 91 days in each quarter of the year; another, H. R. 8350, would impose a $5,000 fine or two years' imprisonment on anyone advocating "principles of Government based upon discrimination to individuals of any particular race or creed, and the third, H. R. 519, would impose a fine of $5,000 or five years imprisonment on "the sending of any papers, pamphlets, books, pictures and writings designed or adapted to cause racial or religious hatred."

Rumania Bans Marriages of Jews, Gentiles

Thousands Seek to Escape Country After 'Purge' Is Intensified.

By the Associated Press.

Bucharest, Jan. 19.—The Rumanian government tonight intensified its anti-Semitic drive by issuing orders making intermarriage of Jews and Gentiles virtually impossible.

Several thousand Jews sought means of escaping Rumania.

Jewish committees visited consulates to ask of the possibility of emigration to Brazil, Ethiopia, Madagascar, Mexico or Australia. Their plight was made more difficult by a finance ministry decree forbidding Jews to take money out of the country.

Premier Octavian Goga's commerce ministry started an inquiry which generally was believed preliminary to purging Rumanian industry of Jews. By January 31 all commercial and industrial firms must report to the government the names of all workers and executives.

Meanwhile, a strike of 350 workers in a textile plant at Galaz, Rumania's largest port on the Danube, was reported. Employers contended they were obliged to reduce working hours and wages due to disturbed markets since Goga's anti-Semitic drive started.

One outbreak of violence was reported when 14 Jewish lawyers, including a woman, were beaten by Gentile lawyers who resented their presence at the Palace of Justice.

In one district authorities were ordered to issue no more firearms permits to Jews, who were ordered to surrender arms already in their possession.

The government repeated its assurance the anti-Semitic campaign was aimed only at alien Jews and that "Rumanian Jews here before the war have nothing to fear."

Rebel Planes Slay 1,000 in Spain

Spain.

ruins, their burning interiors the pyres of hundreds. In the streets the torn bodies of civilians were strewn about. Blood splattered walls where the warning, "Madres Evacuad Barcelona" (Mothers, Evacuate Barcelona) had been scrawled.

Southwestward, across the mountains of Teruel, where rebel and loyalist armies were locked in another terrific battle, Gen. Franco's insurgent artillery hammered the City of Madrid.

Of the 11 direct hits in Barcelona, only one of which could be called a military objective, 6 were apartment buildings that crashed under the blasts of the huge bombs or were gutted by incendiary explosives.

Valencia, whose death toll was said by the defense ministry to be "extremely high," was bombed three times within nine hours, beginning at dawn, before the rebel aviators were satisfied with their work.

After the 95 seconds of Barcelona's bombardment a reporter visited a section of the city where two apartment houses, seven-stories high and of stone construction, lay in pulverized ruins beneath a pall of mortar dust.

One of the rebels' big bombs had been enough to destroy each building. Within the ruins were the bodies of 250 dead. More than 400 wounded were being brought from the shambles. Some bodies had been tossed a half-block away by the force of the blast.

Above the confusion and the groans of the badly wounded sounded the wailing of mothers and fathers, as well as children, searching among the crowds and devastation for loved ones.

More than 600 ambulances were pressed into duty. Emergency hospitals were set up in the open streets. But the confusion hampered their work and I saw women and children die before medical aid could be administered.

Hope Rises Soviet Will Let U. S. Aide Visit Mrs. Rubens

Moscow, Jan. 19. (AP).—A United States Embassy request to interview Mrs. Marie Rubens—identified as an American citizen held on suspicion of espionage—was understood tonight to have been passed on to the secret political police.

Prospects of embassy officials being able to visit the woman, presumably held in Lubianka Prison, appeared strengthened by the Soviet Foreign Office's willingness to submit the request to "proper authorities."

By Soviet law, Mrs. Rubens, if she escapes an espionage charge, would be liable to a maximum sentence of one year for entering the country with a false passport or, if her Soviet visa also was falsified, the maximum would be three years.

Bishop of Nanking Believes Japanese Invasion Will Fail

Says Home 'Complications' Will Help China in 2-Year Fight.

BISHOP YU-PIN.

The Rt. Rev. Monsignor Paul Yu-Pin, Bishop of Nanking, believes the Japanese soon will evacuate his country, and quotes a Chinese proverb in support of his stand.

"We say, 'Violence cannot last long,'" he explained yesterday at Catholic University, where he is spending several days of his stay in America. The present violence, he is sure, cannot continue more than two years.

"It will take Japan two years to conquer all China, and in the meantime other complications will develop," he said. He hinted at an approaching revolution in Japan, pointing out that "the Japanese people do not like this war."

Since his arrival in New York last month, Bishop Yu has received a cable from Nanking announcing that his residence and the majority of the churches in his diocese have been destroyed. "What shall I do when I return? Rebuild!" he declared.

The 36-year-old cleric, who holds degrees from four European universities and speaks seven languages, is touring the Western world in the interest of his people. "I came prepared to arouse the sympathy of Americans, but I find it already aroused," he said. "Now my only duty is to explain the situation of the millions of starving, homeless victims of the war."

He explained it graphically yesterday. "I have seen sights which have broken my heart," he said. "Two or three hundred villagers gathered together for market, one big bomb and the market has become a hell."

He himself narrowly escaped death during the bombing of the Sungkiang station near Shanghai, and is resigned to the danger he faces on his return to China next month.

Bishop Yu classes as Japanese propaganda most of the news stories concerning the invaders' success. "You hear that their troops hold six provinces, for instance. That means only that they hold the railroads and the big cities. In every little village there are hundreds of Chinese waiting their chance to attack. It would take 7,000,000 Japanese to police all of China."

With this reserve of volunteers, "China can hold out indefinitely," Bishop Yu believes. "They can't kill all of us. We have existed for 50 centuries and we intend to exist for many more."

Already he is thinking of the end of the struggle. "When the Japanese retire, we shall be forgetful of their cruelty. Our aim is peace among all peoples. In the moral tradition of Confucius, we shall live up to the ideal of a world governed by justice and charity."

Bishop Yu conferred yesterday with Ambassador C. T. Wang and will see the Apostolic Delegate, the Most Rev. Amleto Cicognani, before leaving Washington Sunday. He is scheduled to address Chinese of Washington at 7 p. m. today at the Chinese National Salvation Society, 607 H street northwest.

Soviet's First Congress Ends, Record Blank

Hundreds of Thausands of Citizens Parade in Red Square.

By the United Press.

Moscow, Jan. 19.—Hundreds of thousands of Russians paraded for hours through Red Square tonight cheering the Soviet Union's first Parliament, which ended its organization session amid blasts of defiance for the enemies of Communism, but without doing any legislative work.

The Supreme Soviet was headed by President Viacheslav Molotov. Until it meets again in biennial session, Molotov's presidium, that includes Dictator Josef V. Stalin as one of its members, will direct the affairs of 170,000,000 Russians.

The presidium will deal with such important matters as the national budget and the third five-year plan, topics not even touched upon at sessions of the 1,143 deputies of the parliamentary bodies.

The last session of the Supreme Soviet was devoted to election, without a trace of opposition, of the new council of people's commissars, and Andrew Vishinsky, prosecutor of the famous "treason" trials, as Soviet attorney general.

The final speakers, defying Russia's enemies and extolling the the Red army, were drawn from the army and navy, and entered the Sovnarkom Hall escorted by soldiers and sailors amid a fanfare of trumpets.

Among the new posts distributed on the council of people's commissars were: Defense, Kelementi Voroshilov; navy, Peter A. Smirnov; foreign affairs, Maxim Litvinov; foreign trade, Sergei D. Chvialev; heavy industry, Lazar Kaganovitch. All had held similar ranking in the previous governmental setup.

London, Jan. 19 (AP).—Ireland's Prime Minister Eamon de Valera tonight indicated his visit to London was an economic success but a political failure as the three-day Anglo-Irish conference ended.

British Clash With Japanese Barely Averted

Tientsin Foreign Concession Refuses to Surrender Chinese in Area.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai (Thursday), Jan. 20.—A dispute between British and Japanese authorities at Tientsin, almost ending in a clash of armed forces, was reported today while Chinese said they had "further successes" on the Hangchow and Wuhu fronts.

Authoritative British circles said a clash was narrowly averted Wednesday afternoon when Japanese army officers at Tientsin allegedly demanded that Chinese within the British concession be handed over to them.

The British refused, according to these sources. The Japanese then threatened to take the Chinese by force, and the British replied that they would resist. The Japanese let the matter rest there, at least temporarily.

British quarters also disclosed that the Japanese high command in Shanghai suggested Wednesday that British forces evacuate their defense lines on the western borders of the International Settlement, saying Japanese troops in adjacent Hungjao could perform the defense duty. The British refused.

At Wuhu, 60 miles up the Yangtze River from Nanking, the Chinese said they had gained "a dominating position over the city" by occupying mountains five miles to the south.

Japanese Repulsed.

Hongkong, (Thursday), Jan. 20 (U.P.).—The Chinese news agency reported today that a strong party of Japanese marines, attempting to land in Yuling Harbor, was repulsed by Chinese troops.

18 Navy Planes Reach Hawaii In Record Time

Long-Range Bombers Make Flight From California in 20 Hours.

By the Associated Press.

Honolulu, Jan. 19.—The Navy strengthened Hawaii's aerial defense today by landing 18 more of its long-range patrol bombing planes at Pearl Harbor after a non-stop flight in record time from San Diego, Calif., 2,570 miles away.

The planes, carrying 127 officers and men, completed the flight in 20 hours, 12 minutes.

It was the Navy's greatest mass flight and brought to 42 the number of big naval planes thus transferred here from the mainland in the last year.

It also brought unofficial estimates of the number of naval planes in Hawaii to 75. Counting Army planes, reported to include 40 bombers and 100 pursuit craft, it gave the islands an unofficial total of 215 fighting planes.

Lieut. Comdr. S. H. Warner, in charge, said the air armada flew through unfavorable weather the first 800 miles, causing an early deviation from the course, along which four surface vessels stood watch. By climbing to 15,000 feet they dodged a "cold front," but collected some ice.

In 1934, 29 men made the first mass flight of 2,400 miles from San Francisco to Honolulu, in 24 hours and 45 minutes.

Death Toll Rises To 47 in Blaze at Canadian College

St. Hyacinthe, Quebec, Jan. 19 (AP).—Officials tonight listed 47 persons dead from the swift fire that trapped students and teachers in the College of the Sacred Heart early Tuesday.

Twenty-two charred bodies lay in the morgue of this small Quebec town, but only four were officially identified.

Dr. Paul Morin, district coroner, opening an inquest into the early morning tragedy, listed as dead the 25 others missing, in the belief their bodies were buried under the frozen wreckage of the school.

Son of Japan's Premier Assails Policy in China

Princeton, N. J., Jan. 19 (AP).—Fumitaka Konoye, Princeton University student and son of Japan's premier, says he doubts in some instances "the sincerity of Japan's policy of self-defense" in China.

"I question whether Japan had to go to some of the extremes that she has in the present conflict with China," he told the Princeton Council of the Knights of Columbus.

Needy Children Lunch Fund to End Next Week

Lunch

that we should not ask Congress for a deficiency appropriation without a specific recommendation from the Board of Education to that effect."

The Commissioner declared that to get a deficiency appropriation through Congress "would require two months at best."

When advised of the committee's decision to discontinue its responsibility, officials of the WPA—which furnishes labor for the project—met, in the office of Director Otto J. Cass to discuss advisability of trying to continue the work on a part basis, using surplus commodities furnished by the Government.

Due to the cost of maintaining the project and the fact the two most important items of the program, milk and bread, cannot be obtained as surplus commodities, it was decided the work must be stopped.

"We are left no alternative. We know the need is very great, but we will have to close down after the current supply of food is exhausted. We have counted it most closely, and decided we can provide lunches through next Wednesday," Mrs. Mary Steele, director of professional and women's WPA projects in the District, said last night.

Mrs. Steele said the $35,000 estimate on needs for the remainder of the year was based "on the closest counting possible and includes the expectation of continuing to get surplus commodities."

She said lunches are now being served to 5,200 daily, but that the need is not being fully met by this quota.

"We are told by school officials that children remain in line for the lunches, in the hope some on the list may be absent and they can take their place," she declared.

The Board of Education is legal sponsor for the lunch project, but assumed that position only because of the emergency existing last fall when it was learned the WPA appropriation could not cover cost of lunch food as it had the year previous.

Supt. Ballou yesterday reiterated his stand that "these children should be cared for by recognized public agencies."

"The feeding of them is not an administrative school duty," he declared. He pointed out further that school officials cannot adequately meet the problem of feeding the needy, since the children are in school only five days of the week."

"I believe the children are certainly as hungry on the two days they are out of school as they are or school days," he maintained.

Charles D. Drayton, board member, declared he would be opposed to any resolution by which the school board would recommend that the Commissioners ask Congress for a deficiency appropriation to take care of the lunch problem.

Mrs. Steele declared she believed with Supt. Ballou, that a hungry child should be guaranteed food the year around.

School Board Asks Teacher to Quit as Rifle Loss Climax

Inquiry into disappearance of $7,000 worth of rifles and other military equipment used by cadets in local colored high schools reached a climax yesterday when the Board of Education called for retirement of Capt. A. C. Newman, professor of military science and tactics in the colored schools.

Newman, in the school system for 40 years, was named in a personnel committee report charging laxity in care of equipment loaned by the War Department.

The board placed principal responsibility for the property loss on Lloyd Muse, custodian, recently resigned, and reprimanded First Assistant Superintendent of Schools G. C. Wilkinson.

liam had seen Anders in San Francisco was true.

Tuesday evening Dr. Mattson said definitely the children had not been taken to St. Paul or Chicago to view Anders.

On Secret Mission.

By the Associated Press.

St. Paul, Jan. 19.—Federal agents, holding Peter Anders for the kidnap-slaying of Charles S. Ross, embarked on a misterious mission today.

Several carloads of the F. B. I. men left for an undisclosed destination amid indications they were seeking the bodies of Ross and the prisoner's alleged confederate, James Atwood Gray, or attempting to find a cache containing the bulk of the $50,000 ransom obtained from the family of the wealthy Chicago clubman.

Simultaneously, they disclosed, Anders was being questioned "about some other kidnapings."

J. Edgar Hoover denied he was interrogated concerning the abduction and death of 10-year-old Charles Mattson, at Tacoma, Wash., but Edward P. Guinane, chief of the St. Paul's G-man staff, said he would be asked about the disappearance of Arthur Fried, White Plains, N. Y., businessman, who has not been seen since December 4.

District.

said. "I don't care which of the two the committee finally selects.

"If the income tax remains, however, I'm going to fight any amendment which will exempt either members of Congress, Government employes or anyone who earns his income, above the primary exemptions, in the District."

The sub-committee will meet again Tuesday to complete drafting the tax bill and to decide what shall be the rates of the income levy.

Public Hearings.

Public hearings will follow, probably beginning the latter part of the week, and continue so long as any civic or trade organizations or private citizens want to be heard. The bill then will be reported to the full committee.

The income tax provision was written into the bill through a tie-up between the two Republican members—Representatives Dirksen, of Illinois, and Cole, of New York—and Representative Wood (Democrat), of Missouri, ardent champion of organized labor.

The fifth member of the subcommittee, Representative Arnold (Democrat), of Illinois, who has favored a sales tax, was absent, but even his vote would not have stopped the income tax.

Nichols voted in turn against each of the three tax proposals. After the income tax was adopted, he contended the District needs the revenue of only two of the levies, or at most approximately $5,000,000.

Asks for a Stand.

After all three taxes had been adopted, Nichols then suggested the sub-committee take a stand on whether it wanted an income tax with exemptions for members of Congress, Government employes, and other groups, or a tax that is all-embracing.

On this vote he lined up with Dirksen and Wood, while Cole alone voted for an exemption. He contended that the measure should exempt members of Congress and that it would not pass the House unless it did.

Before yesterday's meeting the sub-committee had considered a plan to recommend an income tax as auxiliary legislation with the business privilege tax and the $1.75 realty rate making up the major revenue bill. At that time it was suggested the income tax should be tested, both as to its money-raising ability and as to its validity, before it was made a permanent part of the District's tax structure.

The revolt began at a meeting on Monday when Dirksen insisted the income tax plan be included in the major revenue bill.

Even members of the sub-committee who voted for the income tax admitted privately it faced a difficult road ahead, and probably an impasse unless it is amended to exempt members of Congress.

They recalled that the House last year refused even to consider the District tax bill so long as the income levy was in it, and that the powerful Rules Committee backed up the revolt by refusing a special rule until the realty rate hike had been substituted for the income provision.

Even though the Senate adopted an income tax, the House conferees convinced the Senate managers the House was adamant, and so the business privilege tax was restored.

With the bi-annual election coming this year, members predicted the House would be even more determined not to let the income tax bill come to a vote so long as it proposed to tax their salaries.

'The March of Time' Fades Out of Amusement Scene, Bowing to Country's International Relationships!

Release, Scheduled for Local Screening Tomorrow, Canceled in Deference to Nazi Officials in the U. S.; Congressmen Wanted as "Actors;" the Circus Is Coming to Town—in May; Civic Plans Self-Benefit; Notes of the Theater and Its People.

THERE are questions of pseudo-diplomatic relationships, managerial policy and divers and sundry other considerations involved, with which this department has no inclination to lock horns. The maintenance of world equilibrium—such as it is—happily does not fall under the incumbent duties of this column.

But the fact of the matter is that the new issue of "The March of Time," originally scheduled as a particularly provocative "added attraction" on the bill opening tomorrow at RKO-Keith's, will not be shown in Washington. This decision was handed down by the "high command" late yesterday afternoon, following the ban of the issue in Chicago—the theater's high command, that is to say.

BELL.

The reason for all of this agitation and eleventh-hour hullabaloo is that the new "March of Time" deals exclusively with a single subject, a conspicuous deviation from the producers' usual custom of including at least three "clips" in each of its documentary pictorial treatises upon world affairs. That subject is the allegedly "inside story" of Nazi Germany under the regime of Fuehrer Hitler.

It is reported that the matter of Nazi activities both in Germany and America formed the basis of this penetrating analysis of what the movement is all about, its present operation and future potentialities. It was emphasized in the Chicago imbroglio—if that is what it was—that the release of the picture would jeopardize the standing of German functionaries in America, reasonably high in the councils of Herr Hitler's governmental establishment, and probably would end their official careers. The same thing might happen here. So there you are. There will be no "March of Time" at RKO-Keith's tomorrow.

Who's running this country, anyhow?

Today, by the way—and I hope you can do with a sudden change of subject and pace—is the first anniversary of the first January Presidential Inaugural. The switch in dates, it will be recalled, was prompted principally by the prevalence of abominable weather conditions on March 4. I am laughing. Last year, January 20 was marked by a torrential downpour. Yesterday wasn't so hot, either! Why not move the whole merry business to July Fourth and make it a double-barreled day of national observance. And if that has anything to do with show business, I am a Chinaman!

* * * *

On a day like yesterday, incidentally, what is the first thing you think of? The circus, of course—or is it?

At any rate, here is the first news of the "big tops" for the new year, communicated to this desk by that walking encyclopedia of the tanbark and pink lemonade, Mr. Melvin D. Hildreth, president of the Circus Fans Association of America and local barrister of renown.

The combined Ringling Brothers-Barnum and Bailey Circus will rear its shining canvas splendor in the National Capital on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, May 16, 17 and 18. But that will not be the opening gun of the tent shows in Washington.

Earlier in May there will really be some goings-on. Tim McCoy will bring his "New Wild West Show" to town to awe the natives with the closest approximation of a Buffalo Bill show that has come along since that long-haired plainsman passed from America's historic scene.

Col. McCoy's Wild West exhibit will be a brand-new outfit when it unfurls itself here. Fashioned after the Buffalo Bill pattern, it will take the form of an open arena with canvas sides and canopies over the spectators. This canvas will be fresh from the makers on special order from the boss of the troupe. It will be in blue and white stripes from ticket wagon to cook tent. The wagons also have been made to order and all will be pneumatic-tired. The entire unit will be broken out here for the first time.

The "made-to-order" factor goes beyond the pitch on the lot. The rail equipment transporting this recrudescence of the Old West also is being made especially for Col. Tim. It will require a 30-car train to haul this resurrection of pioneer days around the country. That is quite a train in any man's railroading.

Instead of the usual side-show attractions, Col. McCoy will feature an authentic Indian Village as his added attraction.

So now you know. And, if this is too far in advance, try not to forget it and remember that it was I, Richard, who told you.

* * * *

The Washington Civic Theater announces that it will present an extra play as a special benefit for itself. This will be in addition to the regular roster of seven plays scheduled for this season, four of which already have been delivered with three more to follow in March, April and May. For this added starter, the Civic has secured the local rights to "George and Margaret," which recently closed in New York, but still is running in London, where it is in its second year. "George and Margaret" will find the Civickers in gay mood. It definitely belongs to that school of dramatic expression that aims to amuse rather than to instruct. Being an "extra," "George and Margaret" will not be included among the regular subscription plays of the Civic's season. Extra tickets will have to be bought for this one. The proceeds of the performance will be devoted to a fund for the purchase of lights, workshop equipment and the thousand-and-one other requirements of an organization of this character.

* * * *

If there are 12 representatives in the National Congress who have a yen to be actors, here is their chance. A dozen Congressmen who would rather act than filibuster are wanted to appear with Jack Buchanan, Evelyn Laye and Adele Dixon in the "command performance" of "Between the Devil," at the National Theater Sunday night, when the President's Birthday celebrations will be put in motion.

It seems in this enlivening musical comedy, by Dietz and Schwartz, Mr. Buchanan finds Miss Laye and Miss Dixon so irresistibly charming that he marries them both, only to discover, too late, that this unbalanced matrimonial budget is sometimes known as bigamy and is just a shade on the side of the illegal. There has to be a jury. That is where the Congressmen come in—or rather, that is where it is hoped by the management that the Congressmen will come in. Actors' Equity has given its approval of this innovation. No experience is necessary and no speeches need be memorized or made.

That ban on speeches probably will be the hitch in the scheme. But there it is. Line forms to the right.

* * * *

Speaking of the President's Birthday hurrah in behalf of the Warm Springs Foundation, Benny Davis, currently presenting his "Star Dust Revue of 1938" on the stage at Loew's Capitol, yesterday presented his new song, "The President's Birthday Ball," to Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen to the accompaniment of a vast explosion of flashlight bulbs, the clicking of cameras and the usual excitement attending such events. The pictures will go around the world and the song probably will do the same thing.

Caught-in-the-Blizzard Note.

Gallatin Pass was a little tough yesterday early afternoon, but once the dog sledge had cleared a way through the Valley Trail and passed Park Road Ridge, it was a comparatively easy matter to coast down into the Main Settlement. But I hear the boys on the Upper Creek are still snowed in and running short of champagne and caviar!

MIRIAM HOPKINS,
who has just retired from the cast of the Theater Guild's production of "Wine of Choice," as she appears in the stellar role of "Wise Girl," opening on the screen at RKO-Keith's tomorrow. 'Antoinette' Bit Played as Test

Norma Shearer last week played a test scene from "Marie Antoinette," culminating a year of preparation, and a final step before the picture goes into production.

The test, directed by Sidney Franklin, served to introduce Miss Shearer and Robert Morley, English actor and playwright, who makes his first motion picture appearance in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer film as King Louis XVI.

A Broadway Hit Comes to Town For One Night

'Between the Devil' Is to Open Gala Week; the New Bills.

A notable event in Washington's current theatrical season will be the single "command performance" of "Between the Devil," in the National Theater on next Sunday night as the inaugural offering of a week of gay activity in behalf of the President's birthday celebrations and the Warm Springs Foundation Fund for the combat of infantile paralysis. "Between the Devil" will be the first musical comedy presentation of the season—and perhaps the only one of the year—and will bring a triumvirate of British stars of the first rank to the E street stage, with the complete New York production surrounding them. These able players are Jack Buchanan, Evelyn Laye and Adele Dixon. They are supported by a huge cast and ensemble, including many specialty teams that add appreciably to the variety and movement of the piece. Although there will be only one performance of this Broadway hit in the Capital, it will be complete in every detail, a nine-car special train being necessary to transport the production from the Imperial Theater in New York to the National Theater here. Every present indication is that the house will be sold out on Sunday night.

The next regular attraction at the National, opening next Monday night, will be the George Abbott production of "Room Service," a reigning hit in New York. The comedy was written by Allen Boretz and John Murray and is a laugh sensation. A company especially assembled for the Chicago run of the farce will be seen in Washington, led by Reed Brown, jr., Clinton Sundberg, James Lane, Matt Briggs, Fleming Ward, Mary Cheffey, Patricia Palmer, Marshall Bradford, John Clarke, Augusta Wallace and numerous others. These players represent many diverse metropolitan types in the action of the play, all of whom are involved in what are described as convulsing situations. There will be the customary matinees on Wednesday and Saturday.

"Hollywood Hotel," starring Dick Powell, with a notable cast, including Hugh Herbert, Rosemary and Lola Lane, Glenda Farrell, Johnnie Davis, Alan Mowbray, Mabel Todd, Grant Mitchell and Edgar Kennedy, in support, will be the major screen attraction for the week beginning tomorrow. Numerous specialists and prominent national figures lend their presence to the distinction of the film. On the stage, the vaudevillle portion of the entertainment will be headlined by Benny Baker, in person. Master Baker is a vaudevillian of long experience who may be relied upon to bring an engaging "act" to Thirteenth street. Numerous other specialty artists will surround this facile young screen comedian.

Joan Crawford, Spencer Tracy and Alan Curtis are cast in the three pivotal roles of "Mannequin," the new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production that will be seen on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater for the week beginning tomorrow. The story was adapted from the novel by Katharine Brush and deals with contrasting strata of New York's teeming life. There is humor, a bit of pathos and a reasonable amount of "human interest" in the harrative, which is not quite like anything else in which Miss Crawford recently has been seen. The blil will be completed by the usual short-reel subjects and a new issue of the "News of the Day."

Miriam Hopkins and Ray Milland are the principal players in "Wise Girl," the new screen play to be unfurled on the screen at RKO-Keith's Theater following the current run of "You're a Sweetheart," in which Alice Faye is scoring the hit of her celluloid life. The story is said to be one admirably adapted to the talents of its star and leading man. A cast of "names" will be seen in the supporting roles. In addition, a new Walt Disney cartoon comedy also will be shown, "Donald Duck's Self Control." The Pathe News, of course, will be another inclusion.

Ronald Sinclair, a youthful New Zealander, who promises to afford Freddie Bartholomew a little real competition as the foremost of the British juvenile stars of the screen, will be seen in the principal role of "Thoroughbreds Don't Cry," at Loew's Capitol Theater, for the week beginning tomorrow. Master Sinclair finds himself in pretty fast company. The cast of this M-G-M subject also includes Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland, Sophie Tucker and C. Aubrey Smith. The stage bill at the Capitol next week will be headlined by Milt Britton and His Band, that destructive group of instrumentalists who make a shambles of every theater in which they play. The Fox Movietone News and Phil Lampkin's music will complete the bill.

"Wells Fargo," Frank Lloyd's pictorial history of transportation and communication in America, will reappear at the Methopolitan Theater tomorrow as chief feature of the screen bill for the ensuing week. In this subject the foremost roles are taken by Joel McCrea, Frances Dee and Bob Burns. It is a monumental picture well worth anyone's time and attention. The cast is numbered in thousands. Short subjects and full newsreel will complete the bill.

Edward G. Robinson will return to F street for the week beginning tomorrow in the title role of "The Last Gangster," to be shown for a repeat engagement at Loew's Columbia Theater. This is a thrilling melodrama of the underworld and Alcatraz Island, in which a new leading woman is introduced to the screen in the person of Rose Stradner. Lionel Stander, Douglas Scott, John Carradine, Sidney Blackmer and Edward Brophy are other important members of the cast.

"The Boy Who Saved a Nation," a picturized incident of American history; a scenic study of "Old Mexico" and the "Pictorial Review" are three of the major short reels that will fetaure the bill at the Trans-Lux Theater for the week beginning tomorrow. The program will be rounded out, as usual, by complete newsreel coverage of the world, plus a carton comedy, "The Case of the Stuttering Pig."

Tonight, in the Rialto Theater, Paul Rotha will be the guest speaker and productional star of the bill offered by the Film Society of Washington. Mr. Rotha is an authority on British documentary films and will present a series of his own productions in this branch of cinematic enterprise. This will be the fourth of the Film Society's programs.

Rafael Sabatini's "Captain Blood," as picturized by the Warner Brothers with Errol Flynn and Olivia de Haviland in the pivotal roles, will be the outstanding feature of the bill to be presented in the Rialto Theater Saturday morning at 10:30 by the Junior Cinema Guild. The showing of the feature will be preceded by a screen comedy and a brief series of dances by children from Neighborhood House.

Mildred Harris Chaplin, former wife of the famous film comedian and star of both screen and stage, will be the stellar member of "The Big Revue," to be presented for the week beginning with the usual Sunday matinee at the Gayety Theater.

As chief feature of its bill for the week beginning Sunday, the Little Theater will present "Eternal Mask," a foreign-made picture of the first rank never before seen in Washington.

The Post's New Yorker

By LEONARD LYONS

New York, Jan. 19.

CHIVALRY: Dick Watts' review of "Tortilla Flat" wasn't the only reason why Jack Kirkland threw a punch at him. While Kirkland was married to Nancy Carroll, Watts, then a movie critic, reviewed a film called "Devil's Holiday," in which Miss Carroll portrayed a society girl. Kirkland was incensed at that review—because he felt that Dick had insulted Nancy by mentioning how incongruous it was that a girl from Tenth avenue should be portraying a ritzy debutante . . . Thursday afternoon Kirkland was with Miss Carroll, discussed the review of his play, and his anger was aggravated by this reminder.

MYSTERY: In the current edition of Official Detective Stories magazine, Charles Francis Coe's article about the Becker-Rosenthal case is illustrated by a photo of one of the witnesses, with his attorney, Bernard Sandler, and an unnamed young man holding some papers . . . That unidentified young man was the assistant district attorney in the case. His name is J. Robert Rubin—now vice president and one of the guiding officials at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

ENTERPRISE: Just before the Leviathan was sold, Kay Brown of Dave Selznick's office phoned the ship company and said that Mr. Selznick had authorized her to make a bid for the vessel. She explained that Selznick wanted to use the Leviathan in a new movie, wherein the boat would be blown up in midocean. . . . "Have you any idea how much this will cost?" was the question. . . . "All I know," Miss Brown explained, "is that Mr. Selznick gives this order. He's willing to pay $5,000—or $7,500 tops." . . . "We have one other bid," the official replied, "and I think we'll take that one. It's for $755,000."

* * * *

DISCOVERY: At the Capitol this week, in Jimmie Fidler's new short, "Personality Parade," is offered a close-up of Anna Q. Nilssen, star of the silent screen, and the commentator bewails her disappearance . . . A few minutes later is presented one of the "Crime Does Not Pay" series, featuring a splendid veteran of the screen—Miss Anna Q. Nilssen.

* * * *

TRIUMPHS: When Mrs. George S. Kaufman was Sam Goldwyn's Eastern representative last summer, she secured advance proofs of Elmer Rice's "Imperial City," and exacted a promise from Rice not to negotiate with any other movie company until Goldwyn makes a decision. Goldwyn decided not to buy it. Shortly thereafter Mrs. Kaufman resigned . . . Rice then quarreled with his agent, and Mrs. Kaufman promised Leland Hayward to try and get Rice for his account. Rice signed with Hayward, who immediately sold "Imperial City," and Rice's services—to Sam Goldwyn.

DEFEAT: "Right This Way," the musical comedy produced by Showgirl Alice Alexander, closed—after less than a two-week run.. Her wealthy backer, a prominent shipping merchant, who had financed the show, stated that it cost $200,000 . . . "But why did you do it?" he was asked . . . "Because," he explained, pointing to Miss Alexander, "I wanted to teach her a lesson!"

AMITY: John Lambie, Dick Merrill's copilot on their Coronation round-trip flight, will be married in Washington February 2, and yesterday wrote Merrill: "We've been through a lot together, and a few tight squeezes. It looks like I've gotten myself into a situation in which I'd like to have you close by again . . . If you can find the time to come down to Washington to help me make the take-off on my flight to matrimony, I'll be indebted to you till my dying day . . . The uniform will be striped trousers with either a morning coat or a cutaway. I'm going to rent my outfit in Washington. If you don't have one—and I don't think you have—you can do the same thing. We might need to be there several hours ahead of time, for them to alter the clothes to fit us . . . I'll say the same thing you said to those Wasp motors out over the Atlantic—'Don't Let Me Down Now!'"

* * * *

AID: On the night "Hooray for What!" opened, Jack Whiting became ill. And so Roy Roberts, who had the role originally, substituted for Whiting and was lauded by all the reviewers . . . Despite these rave notices, Roberts hasn't performed since—until Sunday night, at the Lambs Gambol. He wasn't scheduled to be there, but was a last-minute substitute—for the ailing Jack Whiting.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

Hollywood, Jan. 19.—Settin' around (Twentieth Century-Fox): On the credit titles of most Twentieth Century pictures, you see this line: "Costumes designed by Royer." Probably you never give that job of fashion designer for a picture another thought—yet anyone who knows his Hollywood realizes that it is one of the most important jobs in the studio.

The Royers of Hollywood earn bigger salaries than most stars. For each picture, they design dozens of costumes — sometimes hundreds. Each costume must conform to the "mood" of the scene, and must harmonize with the color scheme of the set. They must consider the actions which the star will perform while wearing each dress, for a garment which would impede natural movements in any way would wreck a scene.

* * * *

Most important of all, they study the studio's new personalities and design for them complete on-screen and off-screen wardrobes to suit the type to which the studio has relegated the newcomer. More than one of today's great stars owes much of her popularity to the studio designer who has dressed her in "character." Study the clothes worn by the star of the next big production you see, and I will wager that you will understand why fashion design is one of Hollywood's best-paid professions.

* * * *

Visited the set where Jane Withers is starring in "Gypsy"—and harvested a laugh. This morning Jane received from one of her Chicago fans an unusual gift—a mechanical monkey which has, tucked away somewhere in its interior, one of those tinkly music boxes. And, of course, she had it with her on the set. When I arrived, Jane was just starting her big dramatic scene of the picture. After only one rehearsal, the director called for a "take" and, miraculously, everything clicked. The scene was nearing its end, the sound men were smiling approval, the director was beaming. And then Mrs. Withers, sitting on the sidelines, happened to touch that monkey. The music box started to tinkle merrily and, try as she would, she could not discover how to turn it off. I don't think I ever saw a more embarrassed lady.

* * * *

Playing a very important role in "The Baroness and the Butler," is Waldo, a little dog of peculiar appearance and extremely doubtful genealogy. Today, while I was chatting with Bill Powell and Annabella on the set, Waldo began to sneeze. Waldo, quite obviously, had a cold—and every one on the set began to worry. That little pooch has already appeared in more than a hundred scenes—and should anything happen to him, every one of them would have to be refilmed. The director hastily scanned his script, discovered that Waldo was in every scene, and decided to stop production while he visited a dog hospital. It is a rough guess, but Waldo's sneezing cost Twentieth Century-Fox about $10,000 today.

* * * *

Keye Luke, "No. 1 Son" of the Charlie Chan pictures, leads a strenuous life. Each new Chan opus demands some new athletic skill on his part—and since athletic skill of any kind was entirely lacking in the Luke repertoire, he is forced to spend all of his time between pictures learning "how." For successive roles, he had to learn to wrestle, to pole-vault, to swim, to ride horseback, and to do simple contortionist stunts. Now, for "Charlie Chan at the Ringside" he is learning to box. I watched him sparring with a professional on the set today and chuckled to think what Hollywood has done to a shy little Oriental whose one ambition used to be to paint beautiful pictures.

He said his family and his wife were wealthy persons and could get out of paying any tax because some $50,000,000,000 of tax exempt securities is available for their investments.

His eyes narrowing, Chairman Doughton (Democrat), North Caroline, interrupted:

"Oh, liberty, liberty! What crimes are committed in thy name. Every time something like this is proposed, they say it is in the interest of somebody else."

He wanted to know if Cromwell would put the same tax rate on bread and meat as on whisky and cigarettes."

"Yes, sir," the witness replied.

That would mean about the same tax rate for a John D. Rockefeller as for a section hand, the chairman remarked.

"It may be unjust," Cromwell asserted, "that some people have more money than others."

Tax "Reforms" Refuted.

Houston, of the Baldwin company, told the committee that sharp curtailment in the volume of new security issues and the resulting deficiency in business capital, "constitute the major immediate cause for unemployment, and constitute one of the key logs in the economic jam that is delaying recovery."

Declaring capital formation and private business investment the "keystone of our private enterprise system," Houston said that until it is "encouraged and stimulated," the employment problem will not be solved.

He challenged the theory on which he said undivided profits and capital gains tax "reforms" were based —that too large a portion of national income has been diverted to saving and investment in capital facilities.

"Eating the Seed Corn."

"This viewpoint is not news," said Houston. "It has been brought down through generations of economic theorists, including Karl Marx and John A. Hobson, but it has never been applied successfully to a free economy."

He said the undivided profits tax "is having and will continue to have the effect of forcing an imprudent and exhausting distribution of corporate earnings during periods of prosperity without the accumulation of the cash resources with which to continue such distribution during periods of depression."

He called it "eating the seed corn' after a long and exhausting famine."

Gains Tax "Capital Levy."

Houston also charged the capital gains tax in its present form is "in effect a capital levy and a drain upon accumulated savings. He recommended the capital gains tax be amended to segregate net capital gain in any year from ordinary income and tax it at a relatively low flat rate. He said the law should permit carrying forward of a capital loss in any year for offset against capital gains in subsequent years.

Nelson Trottman, of Chicago, attorney for the Northwestern Railroad, urged special tax treatment for railroads facing financial difficulties or "now going through the wringer."

Says "Poor" Pay Now.

Cromwell contended his suggestion would help redistribute wealth.

"Then the only way you know of helping the poor," Representative Cooper (Democrat), of Tennessee, asserted in the interrogation, "is by shifting taxes from the wealthy to the poor."

"That's putting it in a peculiar way," Cromwell responded. "As a matter of fact 75 per cent of taxes are now paid by the poor. I believe if you can relieve capital of taxation you will increase capacity production and this will increase the income of the poor and their standard of living."

He recommended abolition of individual and corporate income taxes and revision of estate and gift taxes.

Easton, Md., Jan. 19 (AP).—The Easton crow shooters had a good time today—they killed about 900 crows, and, found one hunter who got lost.

More than 40 shooters went to Poplar Island for their annual slaughter of the crows which infest the island, foraging on the mainland during the day.

A Noted Drama Is Artistically Done by Civic

'The Distaff Side' Opens With a Splendid Cast at Wardman Park.

By Nelson B. Bell

"The Distaff Side," presented by the Washington Civic Theater at Wardman Park last evening, and to be continued there throughout the remainder of the current week, reveals John van Druten in one of his more contemplative moods.

It deals with the feminine problems in an established English household and rather more than skims the surface of the perplexities confronting a group of women of varying ages whose lives have not always been adjusted to their notions of complete bliss.

There are moments when one fears that Mr. van Druten, as was the case in his "Flowers of the Forest," produced by Katharine Cornell but never acted in the Capital, has launched himself upon discursive puzzles which he may not be able to follow through to a convincing and unassailable conclusion, but in the present instance the tendency toward philosophical explorations ends happily on the side of thoughtful and diverting drama.

"The Distaff Side" is distinctly a play of dialogue, rather than of situation or action. It is mildly argumentative and reflects a penetrating insight into the difficulties that harass womanhood of all ages, from grandmother, aged 75, who celebrates her birthday each year with a decorous debauch, to the granddaughter, whose outlook upon life is not too chaste and just a little befuddled.

Staged with a tasteful opulence that the Civic Theater has not even remotely approached in earlier productions, this offering, in a season of seven plays, immediately takes its place as the most impressive demonstration of expert stagecraft the local group has brought forth. The play, furthermore, is acted with fine skill by a cast that represents perhaps the cream of Washington's resident thespians.

The role created in London and New York by Dame Sybil Thorndyke is interpreted with dignity and quiet repression by Anne Ives, who finds in the character of the second generation of the Venables a splendid medium for the expression of her known talents as an actress to whom the professional stage is no stranger. Last night the part seemed at moments a little too slowly paced, if anything, but its final effectiveness was unimpeachable.

Of the supporting cast, Elinor Lord, as Mrs. Venables; Janet Slauson, as the granddaughter, Alex; Yvonne Kushner, as Liz; Charles Grunwell, as Toby, and Lois Alexander, as Nellie, it seemed to me, easily led the other members of a well balanced and competent ensemble. Miss Slauson gave a performance of Broadway caliber that promises a brilliant future.

Betty Clark, Arthur Westover, Edward Stevlingson, Lucy Howard, Harry Westcott and George Finger contributed valuably to an intelligent and handsome presentation of a play that deserves to be seen.

They Bury Their Mistakes.

Over a long period now a drastic purge has been going on in Soviet Russia. The various administrative agencies, industry, transportation, the press, the theater, even the Communist party itself, have been ruthlessly combed for Trotzkyites, spies, wreckers and others dubbed enemies of the regime.

The more fortunate victims of the Stalinist ax only lost their jobs. But hundreds have been turned over to the firing squad in expiation of their sins. Pains were not always taken to discriminate between simple inefficiency and deliberate sabotage. For those who had to carry out the orders of the Kremlin it was safer to be ruthless than lenient.

By a sudden reversal similar to that of 1930, when Stalin put a stop to the agricultural collectivization program and the liquidation of the kulaks, the powers-that-be have seemingly decided that the purge has gone too far. The order has gone forth to reinstate many of those expelled from the party or dismissed from their jobs. But the dead cannot be brought back to life. They will receive no benefit from the present wave of moderation. The totalitarian regimes, be they Communist or Fascist, bury their mistakes.

That is where both types of dictatorship differ so radically from democracies. The presence of a vocal opposition is always a guarantee that those in power will be restrained by protest and criticism from going to extremes in any direction. But under the dictatorships opposition is itself the greatest of crimes, whether it takes the form either of outright conspiracy or merely a misunderstanding of the wishes of the inner circle.

Thus the zealous officials who over a period of many months persecuted "Trotzkyites" now are told they have been overzealous and may even face the penalties they meted out to their victims. Like the king, in days of old, the dictators of today can do no wrong. It is their underlings who are always at fault.

An Unbalanced Argument.

Invited by the ICC to express his views as to the effect of proposed freight rate increases on the agricultural situation, Secretary Wallace showed pardonable hostility to any program that might detract from farm income. But he did not confine himself to expressing opposition to rate increase on the ground that it "would of necessity lower prices of farm products." He further averred that the roads themselves would actually find their business, hence their revenues, declining with higher freight rates.

The experienced railway executives who have urged the ICC to grant the increases as the only feasible means of securing much-needed revenues may be mistaken in their estimates of the amount of additional income that would be received. But they are certainly better informed than Mr. Wallace as to the probable effect of rate changes upon operating income. The latter's suggestion that the roads might try reducing their freight rates, in the hope of attracting more traffic and possibly adding to their income, is not a responsible recommendation. For it entirely ignores the pressing nature of the emergency resulting from rising railway costs and rapidly shrinking revenues.

A certain bias in the attitude of the Secretary of Agriculture is indicated by his inquiry as to what would happen if every industry throughout the country tried to raise its charges in order to make a profit in face of lowered activity. This comparison completely ignores the fact that the railways as a regulated industry did not share in the benefits of the business expansion to any large extent and are now faced by long-time problems of adjustment quite different from those of unregulated industries free to vary prices with changing production costs.

The arguments made by Secretary Wallace seem the more inconsistent because voiced by one who prides himself on belief in a balanced economy. The depressed state of the railways has done much to aggravate the gravity of the current recession. If the carriers are denied relief, their restricted purchasing power will be reflected in further declines in equipment orders, and further dismissals of employes.

Instead of urging the roads to co-operate with other groups by foregoing needed revenues, the Secretary of Agriculture might now more logically be telling the farmers, as well as other shipping groups, of the necessity of a well-rounded viewpoint in order to preserve still solvent railroads from bankruptcy.

What Is Our Power Policy?

Credit is due Wendell L. Willkie, president of the Commonwealth and Southern Corporation, for keeping the contest between the Government and the private utilities constantly out in the open, where it belongs. His tactics focus attention upon the need of that well-defined, consistent power policy which is as completely lacking today as it was when the TVA was launched.

The President's alternately friendly and hostile gestures toward the private utility interests have lately added to the confusion and uncertainty preventing the utility industry from carrying out plans for new capital expansion. But what the President says impulsively, and subsequently retracts or modifies, is not nearly so important as the fact that, while he talks, a situation has developed calling for prompt and decisive action. It is this need for a declaration of intentions which Mr. Willkie has forced home in his public utterances.

Mr. Willkie has ceased to discuss the fairness of the so-called yardstick method of competition, or to protest against the extension of subsidized municipal power plants. That development is water over the dam since, as he explains, over 40 municipalities in the TVA area have already voted to set up their own distribution systems. With the cheap capital and cheap power placed at their disposal by PWA and TVA, respectively, these municipally-owned companies are almost sure to win in a contest with the private concerns. Hence, Mr. Willkie, confronted by a superior force, is ready to withdraw from the competitive field, asking only fair compensation for the security owners adversely affected.

This demand is one that cannot be ignored; indeed, the mere fact that it has been made is a warning to the country at large that if the present TVA policies are accepted as a pattern for a national policy, private ownership is doomed in the utility field. Maybe that is a desirable end, which would be approved by Congress and the people. But, if so, the objective should be expressly set forth and embodied in the statutory law. If, on the other hand, it is to be the policy to permit public and private operation side by side, the conditions for such co-existence must be understood. And whenever public interests encroach upon private ones, we must in honesty face the question of compensation raised by Mr. Willkie.

Whether, in taking over private properties for public use, the entire system should be valued as a unit or sold piecemeal is a problem over which Mr. Willkie and David E. Lilienthal, TVA director, differ profoundly. While Mr. Willkie's claim that an integrated system is worth more than its several parts seems logical, the question of valuation is one to be left, as he suggests, for impartial determination. Such questions, however, touch upon only one aspect of the intricate problems raised by the Government's activities in the power field.

A thoroughgoing investigation by Congress should be undertaken without delay, with a view to settling the controversy within the TVA and defining more clearly the general policy to be followed in dealing in future with private interests. Even if it is too late to effect modifications of policy that would protect private operating companies in the TVA region from loss, it is not too late to consider whether the Government intends to follow elsewhere a policy that leads logically to extinction of private ownership. Furthermore, the Government should decide whether it means to extend public ownership by waging war on private power companies or by frankly stating its objective and compensating private interests for unavoidable losses.

Such questions, raised by Mr. Willkie's persistent broadsides, should not be decided by the two majority members of the TVA directorate, but by Congress as representative of the American people. Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, the dissenting member on the TVA directorate, has constantly urged the importance of keeping private industry informed of the Government's intentions. In the absence of such knowledge, the utilities have fought the TVA in the courts. Facing defeat in that quarter, they are now ready to withdraw from an unequal contest.

The consumer is interested primarily in securing a wide use of electricity at the lowest feasible prices. That may be obtained sometimes through public, and again through private, ownership and operation of power concerns. The public interest is not served either by wasteful duplication of existing facilities or by unfair competition from subsidized public power plants which surreptitiously force private concerns out of the field with undeserved losses to conscientious investors.

Sex On Treasure Island.

Anybody who would attempt to put sex interest into "Treasure Island" might easily be guilty of anything. And if the Kremlin can only prove that Boris Shumiatsky changed Jim Hawkins into "Jenny Hawkins" at the instigation of Leon Trotsky, it would change a great many opinions about the recent Moscow trials. Merely the fact that for this and other outrages Shumiatsky has been fired as head of the Soviet movie industry should help to retrieve the dwindling prestige of the Stalinist regime.

It would appear, however, that the Soviet art critics have been a long time waking up to what has been going on in their movie industry. They are said to be indignant because Shumiatsky loaded Squire Trelawney's ship with a lot of Irish revolutionists. That should have given no surprise to anyone who saw the Soviet version of "Gulliver's Travels" in which the hero organizes the Lilliputian workers, teaches them to sing the Internationale and helps them overthrow the monarchy.

But if the land of Ivan the Terrible and Dzerzhinsky has finally sickened of that kind of stuff and has really determined to punish the perpetrators, it is more than can be said for unregenerate capitalist nations. The British producers who slapped a blonde into the story of King Solomon's Mines were permitted to go scott free. Very likely they are now openly plotting a production of Robinson Crusoe that will include a Girl Friday and a chorus of cannibalettes.

The unpunished crimes of Hollywood against the classics are so notorious and of such long habit that we have come to accept them with pathetic indifference. Nobody was much startled by the effrontery of Mr. Alva Johnston when he recently wrote that Shakespeare could have made a vastly better job of "Troilus and Cressida" and some other plays if Sam Goldwyn had been there to tell him how to do it.

M. Chautemps' Tightrope.

In order to understand French politics it is necessary to realize that two affirmatives can sometimes make a negative. This is decidedly the case with the so-called Radical-Socialist Party, whose leader, Camille Chautemps, today again holds the premiership. It is a party which is neither as radical nor as socialistic, by American standards, as that of the old line Socialists, whose destinies are presided over by Leon Blum.

When Chautemps succeeded Blum as premier, last June, the French government moved slightly to the right. The measurement of that change is found in the difference between the thorough-going socialism of Blum, and the milder liberalism of Chautemps, who is less wedded to dogma, less doctrinaire, more opportunistic and more politically-minded than his predecessor.

Now that M. Chautemps, after five days of complete uncertainty, has again been named premier it is apparent that a further step toward the right has been taken. For he will try to govern without the official Socialist support which was given his last government, and with neither M. Blum nor any members of the former premier's party in the cabinet. Last June saw the change from a Socialist government with Radical-Socialist support to a Radical-Socialist government with Socialist support. This January sees the latter giving way to an independent Radical-Socialist government, able to formulate its own policies without compromise.

That is the strength of the new Chautemps regime. Its weakness lies in the fact that it can rely upon only about 170 of the 617 members in the Chamber, and thus may be thrown from office at any time. Its chance of survival depends on securing support from either the Socialists, to its left, or the moderate conservatives, to its right. One or other of these groups M. Chautemps can temporarily defy without losing office. To alienate both simultaneously will bring his immediate downfall, the more so as the premier's split with the Communists, who count over 70 deputies, is now complete.

In other words the only certainty about the new French government is that it must balance on a tightrope, with probability of a spill if it leans markedly to left or right. In such balancing, however, M. Chautemps is an adept. Bets would be risky, but it would not be surprising to see him win through, inching little by little toward a stable position which will be somewhat more conservative but far from reactionary.

The goal toward which France is patiently groping is a really strong government of "national union," neither socialist nor anti-socialist in complexion but sufficiently appealing to clear heads in all camps to warrant their support. The need of such a government, in view of the foreign uncertainties and the acute domestic difficulties, is obvious.

If Chautemps can secure this unity his name will be writ large in the history of his country. The fact that the situation is so serious is a point in his favor. For the time when French leaders could afford to be politicians first and patriots afterward is at an end.

With dark pessimism blanketing the land, it is a source of much comfort to see a ray of optimism shining through in Salem, Mass. Two men up there traded wives the other day.

War And Diplomats.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We read with pleasure the letter in The Post of January 14 written by F. Braundorf. The opinions expressed are ours exactly.

If it was impossible then for Congressmen to vote their own and their constituents' opinions on a measure as important as the Ludlow amendment, just how much would they be able to influence a vote on war? Would not Congressmen have exactly the same or worse pressure put upon them by the Administration's big guns?

Those of us who lived through the World War and trusted to the judgment of diplomats have sadly regretted it. Not many people today in the United States are willing to entrust the lives of their families to diplomats. Certainly the women of this country are not craven cowards and they would willingly give everything in a cause they felt just. But in my opinion they are not going to be twice burnt.

Germany today is more war-like than ever. All of Europe is an armed camp. The man on horseback was the result of our war to save democracy and the diplomats had their way. It's time some one else was consulted.

Commends Firemen.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to take this opportunity to commend the firemen of the District who did a very excellent piece of work when a fire broke out in our apartment house Saturday night.

They were courageous, upright, of fine character and co-operative in every way.

They deserve all the credit in the world, and my family will always do what we can to assist them in every way.

A ROUTED TENANT.
Washington, Jan. 17.

"Yeah, Yeah, Amen!"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Some out-of-town friends, hors de combat after strenuous sight-seeing and traffic mooching, were visiting "Aunt Fanny" at her home in a quiet residential neighborhood west of Connecticut avenue, which had been palmed off on her on the pretense of being "near everything but away from the noise, bustle and confusion."

Next morning Aunt Fanny, who is what the lads in Louie's Lounge would call a character, pulled the old bromide few visitors the world over ever escape: "Well, I hope you slept well last night." To which the visitors deposed: "Oh, we would have except for some inspired horn hooters who were pulling their specialty somewhere down the block. Washington seems to be perversely blessed with these cat-on-the-back-fence blotos, who are always sounding off. And with drivers who match the squawkers. The only wonder is that they don't kill more."

To all of which, yeah, yeah, amen! But as to the drivers, let 'em get educated. Then, safety campaigns or normality, they'll do as well as the duck hunters, i. e., haul down their quota.

Exploiting The Negro.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The failure of the leaders of the crusade to enact the anti-lynching legislation to emphasize the economic aspects of the problem causes them to lose much support they could easily secure.

The strife between the poor whites and the Negroes in the extreme South is largly caused by their economic problems. Many of these poor whites are lazy, do not intend to work and live by exploiting the Negro. In many cases the small landowners collect 10 cents for their cotton with Federal Government aid and pay the Negro only 5 cents. They finance these tenants at a general store for an entire year and in some cases greatly overcharge. When the tenants question the bill they force acceptance by intimidation.

In other cases where the tenant could not meet the bill as presented by the landlord, he took the tenant's horses, cows, and even hogs by threats and abuse without due process of law. The ever-present threat of lynching holds these poor Negroes in economic slavery.

If they were emancipated from this terrorism they could prosper and become potential customers for the products of our mills and factories. The South is a far greater potential market right here at home than anything China or any other foreign country has to offer.

When the statesmen and leaders in business in this country realize lynching is the weapon the poor white uses to keep the Negro in economic slavery they will blast away this dam of terrorism that bars the flow of our products to a waiting market here at home.

A Utilities Stockholder.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: President Roosevelt broadcasts to the country that holding companies must be driven from American business.

Neither he nor other radical New Dealers like the idea of Commonwealth & Southern using the country's newspapers to set forth the real facts about TVA competition with private utilities. I really can't understand why President Willkie has not been made a target for further Administration abuse because his company has the temerity to advertise the real facts to the country! Not long ago such practice was characterized as "wasting stockholders' money!"

I happen to be one of the small stockholders in Willkie's company and have assured him from time to time that after all it is our money he is spending, and not that of the average New Dealer, and the more he spends to put the real situation before the country the better we stockholders will like it. We don't need the suggestions of outsiders to tell Willkie how to spend the little money Commonwealth & Southern is earning for common stockholders.

I note with amusement that various prominent New Dealers express no interest in having the Federal Government recompense us for wiping out our company. That is the typical attitude of the New Dealers. A good many of them, like the President, make this fight out to be one between New Dealers and the heads of utilities. The real truth is that it is a fight to destroy the investment of millions of American investors, men and women, in every section of our country. When the holding companies are wiped out, it will not be the fortunes of the utility heads. It will be the savings, in many cases, of thousands.

RUDOLUH WERTS.

"Highly Ethical."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Post is to be commended for the highly ethical position it took recently in withholding from its news report, "because of her youth," the name of the girl who accompanied the Tippett brothers in their brief saturnalia of crime.

To have blazoned the girl's name and picture across the front page merely because the story held all the melodramatic elements which appeal to the mawkish curiosity of the sensationalist would not have profited The Post anything.

Happily The Post is not drunk with the liberties of the freedom of the press, but is deeply conscious of a humane responsibility and the ethics of great journalism.

Views On The Anti-Lynching Bill.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial of January 18, "Time for a Compromise," proposes a substitute anti-lynching bill providing immediate action by the Federal Bureau of Investigation when lynch mobs cross State lines, and Federal Bureau of Investigation assistance in intrastate lynchings when such assistance is solicited by any Governor.

We accept the good faith of your editorial, but the proposal suggested would not work. In the first place, less than 1 per cent of all lynchings are interstate. In the second place, no Governor would risk political suicide by soliciting Federal assistance after an intrastate lynching.

Further, the Federal Bureau of Investigation has no power of prosecution. What would you do with the facts after the Federal Bureau of Investigation has uncovered them? The trouble now in lynching cases is not so much to get the facts as to get prosecutions.

A Federal anti-lynching law is now sought in part because convictions have followed lynchings in less than eight-tenths of 1 per cent of the 5,114 lynchings since 1882.

CHARLES H. HOUSTON.
Washington, Jan. 18.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Here is an interesting commentary on so-called "sectionalism." When one man's child in New Jersey was kidnaped and killed the Northern Senators joined with the Southern ones to enlist the aid of the Federal Government—and there was no time-consuming filibuster.

From an economic standpoint, it is questionable whether the lives of the children of well-to-do or famous persons are most valuable to society than the lives of the "dirt-eaters." The lives of all persons should be protected by the Government, but particularly those who grub about the earth in order that the rest of us may live. If we kill off by terrorism, lynching, or inhumane torture only a few individuals, we break the spirit of a multitude. And eventually, we kill ourselves, for there is no longer anyone to raise our food or make our clothing.

It should, therefore, be noted by the eminent Senators from the South that protection of their workingmen against terrorism is only protection of their own well-being, and that the problem of lynching is no more sectional than is kidnaping. (Kansas, California, Michigan and other States of the North have had lynching cases during the last 20 years, yet the Senators from those very States are backing the present proposal.)

L. WRAY CHOATE.
Washington, Jan. 16.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There are two good reasons why the so-called anti-lynching bill should not become law:

First, because it penalizes A for the wrongdoing of B. A law-abiding citizen may go to bed at night minding his own business and wake up in the morning to find himself, as a taxpayer, burdened with his prorata share of the heavy monetary compensation which the bill provides shall be paid to the next of kin of a person lynched.

Second, because it will handsomely reward some very vicious persons. Experience has shown that frequently the next of kin of persons lynched have been accessories to crimes against women. Under the proposed law, such accessories, if the next of kin of the persons lynched, would be handed thousands of dollars.

FRANK G. CAMPBELL.
Washington, Jan. 15.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: They might have been giants in power and influence. They might have been great men. They might have been statesmen. Future historians might have written their names in letters of gold. How fallen! I refer to those members of the United States Senate who favor lynch law for the South.

When they put lynch law in the place of the United States Constitution they insult and misrepresent the intelligence of the South. By their cowardly resort to the filibuster they act as spoiled children. They throw into the gutter the taxpayer's money. They belie true Americanism—true Americanism teaches fair play; true Americanism teaches the rule of the majority.

The Post Impressionist

Personal Interview.

IT MAY have been that the boss had heard the girl friend and I had quarreled. For he called me over one night recently as I came in from covering a prize fight and smilingly said:

"Say, Romeo, what time are you getting up in the morning?"

I took a sidewise glance at the clock on the office wall, observed that it was 12:40 a. m., and answered:

"I should be up by noon if I get away from here any time soon. Why?"

"Well," he started, "Sonja Henie, the skating star and movie actress, is coming to town tomorrow."

I guess I am pretty dense when the clock has gone beyond midnight, but I failed to get the connection between Sonja Henie and me, a sports reporter, who was still a little punchy from watching the pugs batter each other about Joe Turner's prize ring.

"So what?" I wondered.

"So I want an interview," he shot back. "She arrives here by plane tomorrow afternoon."

I reminded him that being as she was a movie star, the dramatic desk could handle it. But that got me nowhere.

I set the alarm for 9 a. m. and turned the light out in my room at 2:30.

Telephone conversations the next morning revealed that Miss Henie would arrive from Cleveland at 2:40 p. m., would move to the Norwegian Legation to be decorated by the Minister in the name of the King and then retire to her suite at the Shoreham. Everything was to be private but the airport arrival.

And when I arrived there at 2:35 that afternoon I could plainly see that it was a wide-open affair—perhaps even a publicity stunt. There were mobs of persons crowded around the edge of the field. There must have been thousands of them.

I made for the office. The answer to my question, "Is the Cleveland plane on time?" was a casual glance toward the flying field by the attendant. "There it is now," he said, pointing to the monoplane which was taxiing up to position on the front of the runway.

I lit out of the office into the wind that had been blowing all morning and was now hitting at a sharp clip. It was biting cold. It was damp. I pulled my hat close down to my ears and swore.

I found that I couldn't make much time against the surging crowd. I was pushing, shoving and using my elbows to maneuver near the plane.

If I could get to the beautiful skater here I could get quotes and make them to do for my story, I figured. I was pushing hard but making slow progress. I was caught right in the middle of things and couldn't move one way or the other. Over the heads of the persons in front of me I could see the faces of passengers through the little plane windows.

The door of the plane was opening. I had to get nearer. I shoved a fat lady to one side. She swung at my head as I passed, but by that time I had made it to the second line. One more burst and I'd be in position. I took a deep breath and threw myself between two men standing in front of me. When I finished my advance and pulled myself together I was in the front line—staring into the face of a big policeman.

"Press," I said.

I was still staring into his face when Miss Henie stepped out of the plane onto the movable steps. She held two bouquets, one of American Beauties and one of carnations. She was beautiful. Suddenly the thought shot through my rattled mind that another girl was probably furious by this time for my breaking three dates in a row.

I ducked by the cop, jumped up on the first step and waited for Sonja to face me. She did.

I stood there, out of breath, gazing into a pair of sparkling brown eyes. Blonde curls framed a perfect complexion. Her smile was delightful. I spoke against the roar of the crowd and the whistle of the wind:

"Miss Henie, would you please say something for the papers?"

She was looking straight into my watery eyes. She closed her mouth as though ready to speak. I was on the verge of success. I waited, pencil in hand.

I was going to get "the statement."

"I," she uttered as a gust of wind reached our position. "My goodness, my dress is blowing above my knees." BOB GARRISON.

Charity Raffles.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: One of the things that my parents taught me was that all forms of gambling are wrong—that it was wrong for me to think so lightly of what I had that I would stake its possession on a chance—and that even if I should be the winner, I would be guilty of dishonesty because I would be knowingly taking the property of someone else who was not given "value received" by me.

In the several decades of my life that have since passed, I have seen nothing, heard nothing, to change my views from those which my parents' teaching gave me. The strange thing to me is that all sorts of petty gambling are engaged in by people who profess to deplore the gambling which is recognized to be a direct cause of crime.

At times lodges, clubs, unions, even churches, raise money for various uses by raffling schemes, which are a form of gambling, even though they may be engaged in with a view of raising money for charitable purposes. How can the people who foster these schemes expect laws against the gambling schemes which vicious characters promote to be enforced when they cling so tenaciously to their own practices? OBSERVER.

Fair Enough

Horse Bourse.

JERSEY CITY under the dictatorship is the home of the greatest gambling industry in the United States and perhaps the greatest, by volume, in the world—the Horse Bourse, in which enormous quantities of money are wagered on the races run at all the tracks in this country and Canada. The business is conducted over a system of wires leading to the tracks and to other horse rooms in many cities which stand in the same relation to Jersey City as minor exchanges and brokers' offices around the country stand to the New York Stock Exchange.

PEGLER.

Jersey City is the Wall Street of the horse gambling business, with many offices in daily operation, and the pressure of money from the bourse is able to make and control prices almost instantaneously at horse parks thousands of miles away.

For example, if a Jersey City operator finds himself unable to lay off with other operators elsewhere a bet which he does not want to handle alone, he wires the track at which the race is being run, just before post time, dumps a load of money into the mutuel machines through an agent on the grounds and hammers down the odds so that his loss, if he should lose the bet, will be reduced to convenient size.

• • • •

THE MAN who is reputed to be the greatest single operator on the Jersey City Exchange was once a waiter in New York, but is now regarded as a millionaire. However, the business is not a monopoly, and many New York bookmakers' clerks find employment on the Horse Bourse during the months when the steeds are not running on the New York tracks. It is an illegal business, but clean by comparison with prostitution.

The ramifications of the system are vast and mysterious, but its existence has been a matter of common knowledge in the sport business for years, and there is no doubting that the volume is such as to beggar the daily handle of such tracks as Hialeah, Narragansett and Santa Anita.

Inasmuch as it is a known fact, acknowledged by the horse business, that notorious racketeers with criminal records and underworld connections are permitted to operate horse tracks, it is not unthinkable that some of the brokers holding seats on the Jersey City exchange may also be silent partners in some of the tracks. In that case they would possess a strong advantage over the customers who place bets with them.

In years past both St. Paul and Toledo were notorious havens for criminals who were permitted to rest and spend their money in those cities under police protection on condition that they refrain from professional operations. Jersey City offers similar hospitality to horse brokers who come properly sponsored, although, of course, there is no requirement that they cease operations. Driven out of other cities or harassed by unregulated executions and raids, they may settle down in Jersey City and do business in security and dignity, with profit to themselves and to those who guarantee their freedom from molestation.

THE IMMENSITY of this phase of Jersey City's commercial life is so well known to politicians and persons in the gambling business that it seems frivolous to speculate on other sources from which some Jersey statesmen derive income obviously much in excess of their known pay.

The Horse Bourse is a protected racket handling millions of dollars, and it would not exist for an hour if the local administration were not interested in its preservation. In addition to the more obvious emptation of a percentage or a flat license fee there s also the interesting business chance provided by ne landlord who rents office space to a member of he bourse at a rate roughly comparable to that harged in other cities for premises used as brothels. he landlord can afford to be liberal to the political leaders.

Jersey City is rather proud of her reputation for cleanliness as regards commercialized vice. Her leaders are of the type who have an honest detestation for any man who would make a dollar off a woman, but even if they were less fastidious the vice racket would be hardly worth the bother with the horse racket so well organized and so lucrative.

An organization with a private little Wall Street grinding away in its behalf under effective regulation and iron discipline can well afford to reject with pious scorn any part of the money which a policeman might bring from the cold fingers of a rain-soaked street walker in the mouth of an alley at night.

Jersey City has the richest, the most regular and the least troublesome racket of all.

The Once Over

Washington Conference.

The President—Greetings, gentlemen. It's a nice day, isn't it?

First Industrial Chief (sourly)—For what?

Second I. C.—Mr. President, we are very glad to be here . . . well, suppose I just say glad and cut out the "very."

President—I assume you boys know what is in back of these little White House conferences.

Third Conferee—What worries us is what's in FRONT of 'em!

• • • •

President—You and I know . . . I beg pardon, I was thinking I was on the radio. The paramount need of the day is co-operation. Are you prepared to co-operate with the Government?

Fourth Conferee (as all shudder violently)—Fully prepared. In fact, I'm wearing a headguard under my regular hat.

President—The trouble has been that we have been pulling in opposite directions. I've been going one way and . . .

All—What do you mean "ONE" way! It looked to us as if you were piloting a merry-go-round.

President—No sarcasm, please. The point is, are you ready to do as I wish or are you ready to do as I wish?

First Conferee—You seem to be leaving out an alternative.

President—There you go talking of old-fashioned things like alternatives again! We are not getting anywhere, boys. I would like to see a little more spirit of surrender.

Several Conferees (in surprise)—Surrender! It's too late for that, isn't it?

President—What makes you think so?

The Several Conferees—We thought we had been TAKEN PRISONERS!

• • • •

President (gayly)—Oh, you fellows are altogether too gloomy.

Fourth Conferee—It's been five years since we've seen anything around here to cheer us up.

President—How many times have I told you that you had nothing to fear? Didn't you hear me on the air?

Third Conferee—Yes, but we also heard you saying taxes were paid out of the sweat of every man's brow and that if elected you would ut all Federal expenses 25 per cent.

President—Oh, that was so long ago I've forgotten all about it.

All—You're telling us!

It puzzles a good many people to understand why a Government that snoops into private lives so steadily and even broadcasts the salaries and incomes of thousands of its citizens can become so indignant over a little wire-tapping.

Germany In Palestine

Observer Believes Jews Exiled By Hitler Will Not Convert Near East Haven Into New Teuton Community.

The Post presents the second of four articles discussing the present problems and future outlook of Palestine.

By C. P. Poznanski.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Jerusalem.

SYLVAIN LEVI, perhaps the greatest Orientalist of our time and president of the Alliance Israelite, said once to a friend: "Of course, Hitler, when he started the persecution of Jews did not aim at it, but nevertheless, today the Palestinian problem is linked with the German problem and 20 years hence Germany may claim a paramount influence in Palestine based on the number of German citizens established in this land and on the predominance of German culture."

This striking formula, the exactness of which we shall have to ascertain is based on one indisputable fact: The difference between the German immigrants to Palestine and the immigrants from other countries.

To begin with the non-German immigrants acted voluntarily; they came to Palestine because they wanted to leave their country of origin, and because they wanted to come to Palestine. The German Jew left Germany because he was compelled to do so.

Secondly, the Polish or Russian Jew who came to Palestine, even if he was not a conscious pioneer of the Jewish state was conscious of his Jewish nationality as distinct from the nationality of his country of origin. Assimilated Jews did not emigrate. Thus even if he was influenced by Polish or by Russian culture he was quite prepared to build up a purely Jewish culture in Palestine.

The German Jews were largely assimilated. They not only spoke German, but they felt German; many of them were even prominent in German nationality parties. They came to Palestine not as to a lost fatherland, but as strangers to a foreign country.

German Emigres Warned Of Hardships in Palestine.

IN A PAMPHLET which is distributed on the ships to German emigres we read under the signature of Dr. Werner Senator, the head of the immigration department of the Jewish Agency, the following lines:

Palestine is no paradise. It will not be easy for you. The language is for you a foreign language. You are not used to the climate, and first of all you find a social world, habits of life and of business which you will have to learn and to understand. You are no longer in Europe. The community which will accept you in many fields has not yet found a new unity. Each of us has brought with him something from the land where he came from—and where is a part of the earth from which we did not come? From America and from Poland, Bukhara and Rumania, Russia and Persia; you will find here traces of all these cultures, of their good and bad habits, and it will need generations before all these elements will be melted in one new organism.

Notwithstanding this, however, it does not seem probable that the prophecy of Sylvain Levi will come true, that the German Jew will play in Palestine the role of the vanguard of a future German influence.

It is true that in the beginning in 1933 and 1934 the majority of the German emigrants wanted to retain their German character. They refused to learn Hebrew, they considered Palestine as a temporary exile, from which they would return to a new non-Hitler Germany, or as a halting place before a definite settlement somewhere else.

But now the situation has changed. The stabilization of the Hitler regime, the apparent approval of a big majority in Germany of the persecution of Jews has loosened or completely severed the ties with the land of origin. For an immense majority of the German Jews in Palestine, Germany is no longer "home." Even the young ones who are unable to assimilate themselves in Palestine, who dream of leaving the land, do not think of a return to Germany—Hitler or no Hitler.

Gap Between German And Non-Germans Noted.

A NOTABLE German Jewish intellectual even complained to me that there are no ties between the German emigrants in Palestine and the non-Jewish German emigrants in other countries. He pretended that there is much more in common between the Russian Jews who have lived for 30 years in Palestine and a Milioukov, than between the new German emigrant and a Heinrich Mann.

The earnestness with which many of these immigrants try to forget that they ever have been Germans and want to become good Palestinians may be illustrated by a small example. Hebrew is a difficult language, especially difficult for Germans to learn.

While the majority of the Polish and Russian emigres, even if they did not speak Hebrew colloquially, knew the elements of the language a large majority of Germans were completely ignorant of it. They started to learn it, but could not succeed in mastering it. And today one finds in Palestinian Hebrew papers the more difficult words are followed in brackets by a German translation.

The influence of the schools is important, too. There are families where the parents began to study Hebrew because the children refused to speak German.

Secondly, among the German emigres there is a certain proportion of former Zionists, that is to say, people who even in Germany were conscious of their Jewish nationality.

Finally, Germans in Palestine are not entirely settled. Many of them, who can not adapt themselves to the Palestinian conditions, leave the country. Of the young people who entered the kibutzim not more than 40 or 50 per cent remain after the year or trial.

Writer Predicts Germans Will Be Good Palestinians.

THUS, the big majority of the German Jews, who will remain in Palestine, will become good Palestinians and will certainly refuse to play the part of political exponents of German influence.

But by force of circumstances, willy-nilly, they are the pioneers of the economic influence of Germany. German immigrants can transfer parts of their fortunes to Palestine only in the form of German industrial products. It is humanly difficult to oppose it. The result is that Jewish Palestine is not only one of the few countries where a Jewish boycott of German goods has never been applied, but it is also a country where Hitlerian Germany is in the first rank of importing states and is continually increasing the volume of its exports.

Wagner Labor Act Enters Algic Trial

Charlotte, N. C., Jan. 19 (AP).—The issue of whether the Wagner labor relations act gives seamen the same right as land labor to strike was projected today into arguments before the United States Circuit Court of Appeals here in an appeal of 14 seamen convicted of conspiracy and endeavor to revolt at Montevideo, Uruguay, last September 10.

The 14, members of the crew of the Government-owned freighter Algic, were convicted at Baltimore on the charges, which grew out of an alleged sitdown strike aboard the vessel in protest against the use of what the seamen called "strike-breaker" stevedores to load it. Nine defendants were given two-month prison sentences and the other five fined $50.

Veryl Patterson Wins Gorgas Essay Contest

Veryl Patterson, Cardozo High School senior and member of Section 12B2, was declared the winner of the Cardozo entrants in the ninth Gorgas memorial essay contest, eliminations for which were held this week. Because her 1,500-word essay titled, "The Achievements of William Crawford Gorgas," was judged best of those submitted by her school mates, Miss Patterson will compete for the District award with the winners from the other local high schools.

The contest at Cardozo was directed by a faculty committee composed of Mrs. B. C. Reason, chairman; Miss A. E. Duncan, Mrs. B. C. Anderson, Miss E. L. Williamson, Mrs. M. H. Skinner, W. C. Curtis and W. W. Phillips.

French Crisis

By Barnet Nover.

From Chautemps to Chautemps.

FOR FIVE whole days after the Chautemps cabinet resigned France was without a government, the longest French political crisis since the World War. For five frenzied days one political leader after another was approached to take the helm.

One—Sarraut—refused. Two others—Georges Bonnet, erstwhile finance minister, and Leon Blum, France's first Socialist premier and second in command in the late Chautemps government—tried and failed. The circle came to a full stop with the return to power of Camille Chautemps. And he has now formed the first one-party government to hold office in the republic in many years. Of the 20 leading members of his cabinet 18 are Radical Socialists.

• • • •

NOT SO MANY years ago the Radical Socialists were definitely a left, that is a radical, party, although it has always been possible to say of them as it has been said of Frenchmen generally that while their hearts are on the left, their pocketbooks are on the right.

The Radical Socialists still consider themselves a left party. But actually, because of the May, 1936, elections, which saw a considerable increase in Socialist and Communist strength in the Chamber of Deputies, the Radical Socialists are now par excellence the middle-of-the-road group. And occupying a point in the very center of this party is Camille Chautemps himself.

Because of their position, the Radical Socialists would like nothing better than to govern with the aid of all the moderate elements. In this category they include the Socialists whose leader, Leon Blum, proved himself during the past year to be very cooperative. They also include the more liberal elements of the right.

• • • •

COULD THEY MANAGE to bring such a coalition into being it would be a very bright feather in their cap. Even those conservative elements more or less reconciled to the Popular Front's social legislation have viewed with suspicion the dependence of both the Blum and the Chautemps governments on the Communists, that is on the necessity in each case of winning the votes of the extreme left for any governmental policy requiring the approval of the chamber.

This circumstance has been subject to a very considerable exaggeration by France's Red-baiters, of whom there are many. The theory that it was the Communist tail that wagged the Popular Front dog is subject to very considerable reservations.

In entering the Popular Front the French Communists shelved a very large portion of their program. They continued to support the government, even when, as in the case of France's continued adherence to the nonintervention policy regarding Spain, they found it objectionable in the extreme. Indeed, a very good case could be made for the argument that the Communists, instead of being the dominant element in the Popular Front, were really prisoners of that coalition.

BEING OUTSIDE the government, though supporting it, the French Communists felt themselves free to talk in a manner quite different from the way they usually voted. From time to time they were sharply critical of the conduct of affairs by M. Blum and his colleagues and later by M. Chautemps and his colleagues. In doing so they saw an opportunity to make political capital at the expense of their Socialist rivals who also represent working class constituencies. And sometimes they did not hesitate to make threats.

The Radical Socialists had never been very enthusiastic for the Popular Front, at least the right wing of the party was not. Above all they found the enforced partnership with the Communists little to their liking. When, therefore, M. Blum proposed that the Communists be included in the government, as they would have been in 1936 had they then not refused, the Radical Socialists balked. But when that happened the Socialists, too, decided it was wiser for them to be outside the government than in.

M. CHAUTEMPS and his party, therefore, found themselves all alone. They have formed a government, but there is no assurance that such a government will be anything more than a temporary stop gap. For while the Socialists have agreed to support Chautemps as long as he doesn't sabotage the Popular Front program, there is no telling how long this attitude of benevolence will continue.

What France has today, therefore, is a Popular Front government without Popular Front participation and even, it may be, without the Popular Front. This makes for confusion and uncertainty, since the most stable combination in the chamber continues to be now, as from June, 1936, onwards one that embraces the three Popular Front parties. Indeed, the recent cantonal elections showed very clearly that the great majority of French voters belong to the left.

In any case, if Chautemps has, as some commentators assert, cut off the Communist tail that so annoyingly wagged the governmental dog, he is now faced by the fact that this canine has already begun to grow a new tail with the same wagging proclivities. The new Chautemps government will be at the mercy of the Socialists, who, no longer in the government, will not be so ready to restrain their criticisms, even as the last Chautemps government, which included both Radical Socialists and Socialists, was presumably at the mercy of the Communists.

Thus France faces a renewed period of political instability. But then, such a situation has been chronic in France for a long time. Any nation which will try to capitalize the latest French crisis to embark on any rash adventures detrimental to France's interests is certain to discover that the present turmoil in the republic is not much more than surface deep.

Exterminators, Too

By Edward H. Podolsky.

Lethal Inventions By Doctors.

STRANGE as it may seem, the physician has played a rather sinister role in inventions for the extermination of human life. The modern machine gun had its origins in the inventions of Dr. Richard Jordan Gatling, who was born in 1818 in North Carolina.

Dr. Gatling neglected his practice to devote his time to invention. His earlier inventions were a steam plow and a machine for sowing seeds, but these have now been apparently forgotten. But it is for his invention of the Gatling gun, which was first used during the Civil War, that Dr. Gatling is known in history. The Gatling gun was the first of the great modern engines of wholesale destruction.

• • • •

ANOTHER DOCTOR who invented a machine to destroy human life and whose name has become part of the language on that account was Dr. Joseph Ignace Guillotine, who was elected to the French Constituent Assembly. In that very same year, he brought forward a proposition that all capital punishment should be by decapitation and by a specially devised machine. He wanted death to be swift and painless.

Two years later a law was passed that everyone condemned to death in France should be decapitated. Dr. Guillotine invented the machine to accomplish the decapitation. It was first called the lousette, and later the guillotine.

• • • •

IN THE UNITED STATES, the electric chair was invented by a New York physician whose aims were similar to those of Dr. Guillotine. He wanted death to be rapid and free from pain, although he himself was opposed to capital punishment. Even today doctors are endeavoring to find less painful means of executing criminals. Poison chambers have come into use in several Western States.

Tom McCarthy

January 15, 1938.

Mr. Tom McCarthy,
The Washington Post,
Washington, D. C.
Dear Mr. McCarthy:

My neighbors here in Northeast have elected me to write you in reference to the picture run in your column every day. We all agree that when you were on the road last summer, it was okay that you appear as an open-shirted hitchhiker.

McCARTHY.

But now, as far as we know, you ride street cars, cabs or buses. We expect that since you have returned you have probably indulged in such civilized practices as saying "Thank you," and ordering ham-on-ryes at the drug-store counter. But despite that they're using the same picture which was in your column last summer.

Now, we might not object to merely the same picture. But between us and you, old man, don't you feel that even the picture has changed. We mean, something must have gone wrong at your shop because you don't even look like a hitchhiker now.

You're just a hollow-eyed, toothless specter of a mission stiff, to your readers. And if we didn't know that the picture is made of metal we'd say that the emulsion had run down the right side of your face.

So how about it? We mean, we'd like to see you in a new pose with a tie and, maybe, even a coat. Anyhow, we'd like a little less beard. So how about a new picture? Stop haunting us!

Dear Neighbors in Northeast:

Well, as you can imagine, I was mightily pleased to receive your communication in relation to my picture in The Post.

But, come now—don't try to scare me. I mean, after all, I can recognize a joke just as well as the next fellow. And don't you think that crack about me looking like the "toothles specter of a mission stiff" was overdoing if just a bit.

Don't misunderstand me. I'm not getting worked up about this. But I don't really feel it's as bad as all that. However, I will see what I can do about getting another picture.

Very truly yours,

I just got a letter from some people in Northeast who say that my picture in the paper looks like hell. They didn't break down and tell me, but they got it across that they were all but using it to scare the children to bed nights.

Can't we do something about it?

After all, these people complaining in Northeast are subscribers—I'll bet.

A meeting of Governors of the six New England States, held in connection with the National Rivers and Harbors Congress convention, was closed yesterday with an informal gathering at the Mayflower Hotel. Sponsored by the New England Council, it was attended by the Governors and Congressional delegations.

The Governors conferred earlier with President Roosevelt on flood control and power rights in the Connecticut and Merrimack River valley. Pending compacts, which give the States power rights at reservoir and dam sites, were discussed.

Governors Charles F. Hurley, of Massachusetts; Wilbur L. Cross, of Connecticut; Robert E. Quinn, of Rhode Island; George D. Aiken, of Vermont; Francis P. Murphy, of New Hampshire, and Lewis O. Barrows, of Maine, attended the party.

Louise Stanley, Of Agriculture, GHA Trustee

Home Economics Chief Is First 'Outsider' Named by HOLC Clinic.

Election of Dr. Louise Stanley, chief of the Bureau of Home Economics in the Department of Agriculture, to the board of trustees of Group Health Association, Inc., was announced yesterday.

Simultaneously the association, moving aggressively forward despite attacks on both its legality and its legitimacy, revealed that applications for membership have been received from employes of the State and Treasury Departments, Maritime Commission and National Labor Relations Board.

Dr. Stanley becomes the first official of GHA, whose health clinic was launched at 1328 I street northwest last November 1, chosen from outside the ranks of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. More than 500 Agriculture employes have applied for membership in the association, 425 of whom already have been accepted.

All other trustees were re-elected at the annual meeting, including William F. Penniman, president; R. T. Berry, secretary; C. K. Berlin, Ivan D. Carson, C. D. Otterson, L. E. Ring, Horace Russell and Ormond E. Loomis.

Dr. Henry Rolf Brown, clinic director, reported there now are 1,156 paid-up members, exclusive of the 425 Agriculture workers yet to be signed up. Of this total, 203 are Social Security Board personnel, 62 are with the Rural Electrification Administration and the remainder are employes of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, chiefly its main unit, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Fifty more from the Social Security Board are seeking membership, likewise 30 from the Rural Electrification Administration. Another 100 have applied for membership from the Farm Credit Administration. The Department of Justice, Securities and Exchange Commission, Federal Reserve Board and Bureau of Standards have been approved for GHA affiliation, but no employes have been signed yet.

In addition, 85 per cent of the 200 employes in the Maritime Commission have asked to come into the plan, along with personnel groups in State, Treasury and the NLRB.

Slightly more than one-third of the 1,156 men and women now eligible for clinic service are family members, paying $3.30 a month, Dr. Brown said. Single members pay $2.20.

Youth Held in Killing Over Bird Hides Name

Henderson, N. C., Jan. 19 (AP).—Police said today a youth held in the ax-slaying of an itinerant showman confessed the name he gave was an alias, refusing to establish his real identity.

The youth was booked in the Oxford, N. C., jail as Clarence Fairbanks, 20, of Baltimore. Police quoted the youth as saying he killed his employer, Steve Good, 40, of Austin, Tex., and seriously wounded Mrs. Good because Good was cruel to an exotic bird exhibited in his show.

HELP KIDNEYS PASS 3 LBS. A DAY

Doctors say your kidneys contain 15 miles of tiny tubes or filters which help to purify the blood and keep you healthy. Most people pass about 3 pints a day or about 3 pounds of waste.

Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning shows there may be something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

An excess of acids or poisons in your blood, when due to functional kidney disorders, may be the cause of nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills. Adv.

Brazil Buys Ship Materials in U. S.

By the Associated Press.

Balked in efforts to lease six United States Navy destroyers, the Brazilian government, it was learned yesterday, is placing orders in this country for machinery and raw materials for three destroyers, to be built in Brazilian shipyards.

Lieut. Comdr. Raul Reis, naval attache of the Brazilian Embassy, said orders were placed late last week for turbines, boilers, steel plate, cables and other materials. The turbine order, totaling $3,800,000, was awarded to General Electric Corporation, and the order for boilers, totaling $1,800,000, went to Babcock & Wilcox.

Mechanics' Bill.

The National Association of Federal Mechanics sponsors a bill (HR. 8876) to create a mechanical service classification in the civil service to strengthen the identity of mechanical employes who are now blanketed under the custodial service. The bill's preamble reads:

. . . "That all classes of positions within a recognized trade or craft, the duties of which are to construct, maintain, repair or operate Government property or to maintain or repair Government-owned buildings, Government-leased buildings or Government-operated buildings," etc., within the District and the field service, "are hereby removed from the custodial classification of employes within the classification act of March 4, 1923, as amended. All such employes affected are hereby placed under a service to be known and designated as the 'mechanical service.'"

The act would become effective on July 1, 1938. The association, seeking the act's passage, is nearly 1,000 strong. The group presents statistics to support complaint that they are at the bottom in salaries and at the top in long hours of work. For purposes of comparison, the association pointed out that Federal mechanics under the classification act average only $1,680 annually, compared to $2,745 earned per year by mechanical employes of the Government Printing Office and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Similarly, the association's members work 2,288 hours per year, compared to 2,080 hours put in by all other mechanics in Federal and District service.

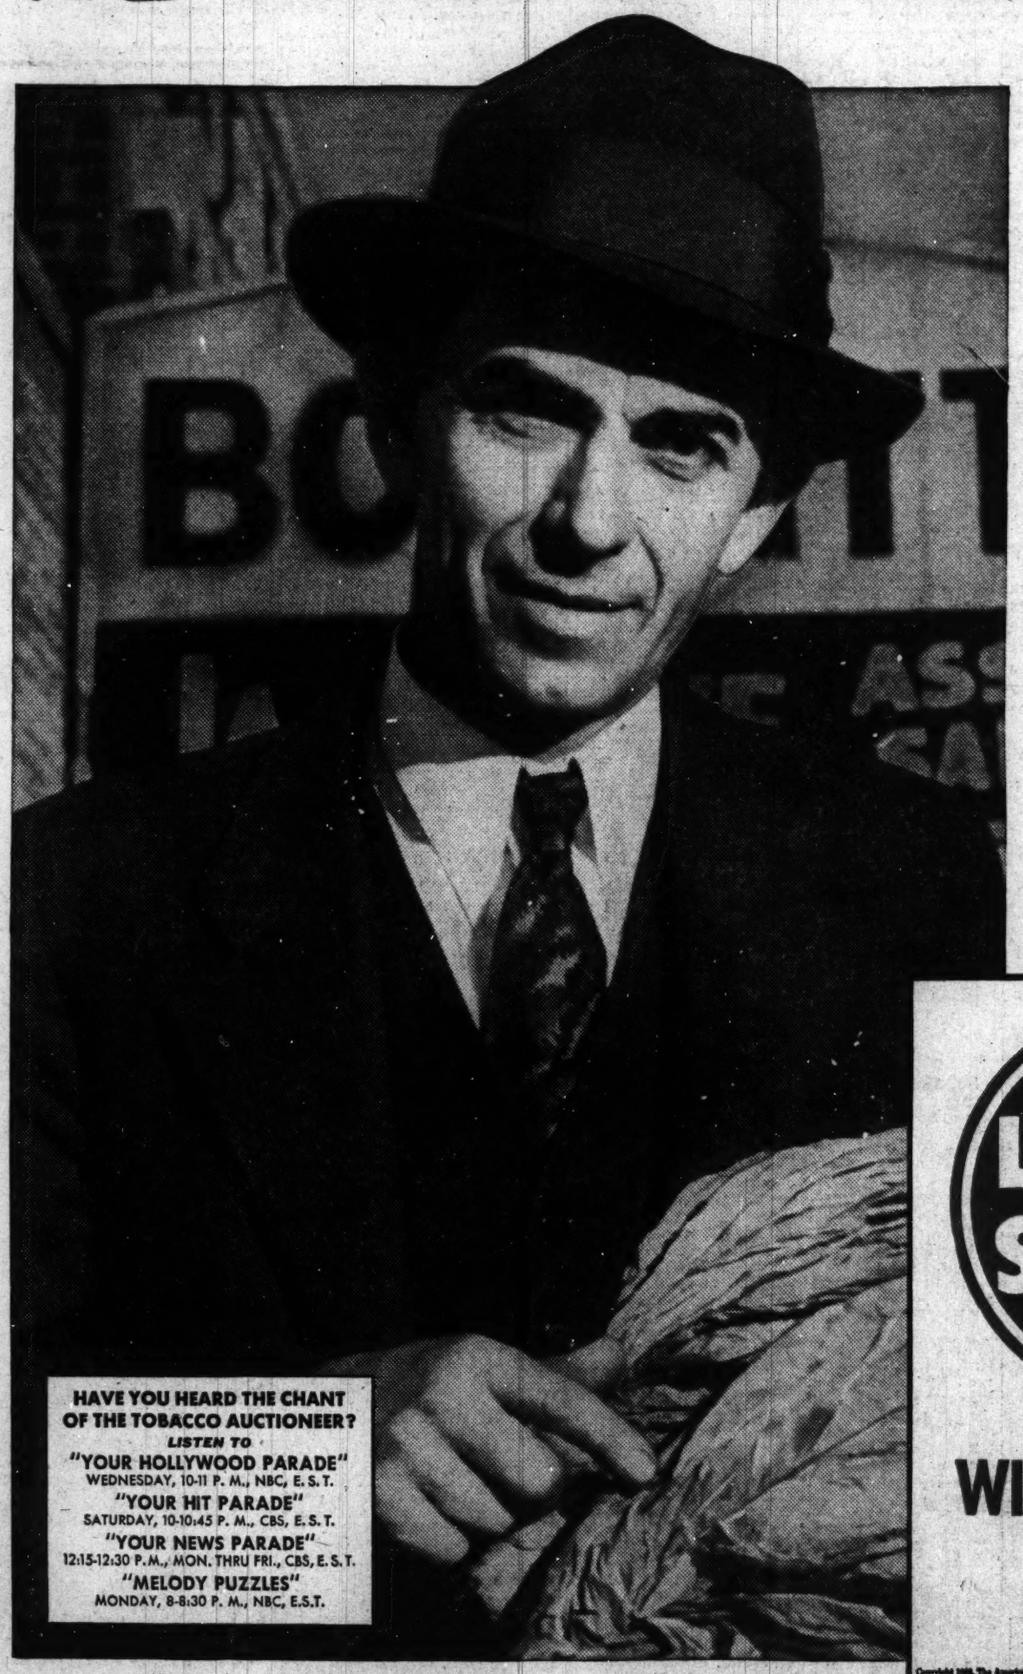
HE SELLS TOBACCO TO THEM ALL



But Branch Bobbitt, like so many other independent experts, prefers Luckies . . .

"AT AUCTIONS in my warehouse in Farmville, North Carolina," says Mr. Branch Bobbitt, "the higher the tobacco sells for, the better my profits. So I'm always glad to see Lucky Strike buyers in there bidding. They know what they want and they'll keep bidding right up until they get it.

"Well—in a cigarette—it's the tobacco that counts. I know tobacco and I know what tobacco is in what cigarettes. So that's one reason I've smoked Luckies for five or six years."

Mr. Bobbitt represents the "aristocracy" of tobacco experts. He judges the tobacco that the growers grow. He's impartial, not connected with any cigarette manufacturer.

Many other experts agree with Mr. Bobbitt. Sworn records show that, among independent tobacco experts, Luckies have twice as many exclusive smokers as have all the other cigarettes combined.

efficiency and other reasons—which was taken as a modification of his proscription of all holding companies uttered at his press conference last Friday.

The council's statement did the following things:

Urged on Mr. Roosevelt a fresh study of wages and hours legislation and that, before a decision to go ahead again with such a measure, Government representatives consult with representatives of both labor and industry who participated in the administration of NRA. The President indicated he was agreeable to this suggestion, provided such a study did not prevent action at this session of Congress.

Expressed the belief that "the co-operation within industries attempted under the NRA held much that is desirable to preserve" and asserted that "monopolies and monopolistic practices are incompatible with democracy, except in the case of those industries which in the public interest should be subjected to Government regulation.

Decried the use of holding companies "for financial manipulations and undesirable extension of control in the hands of a few people," but viewed with "grave concern any general move to outlaw proper holding companies with their many advantages for the public good or to interfere with the operations of the mass production industries."

Expressed the "sincere conviction that the first objective in the present situation must be the re-establishment of business activity and re-employment and that reform of abuses must be conducted with a sympathetic understanding of the functioning of legitimate business."

Sympathized with the Administration's objective in eliminating pyramiding of and abuses by utility holding companies, but expressed disturbance over the situation existing between the Government and the public utility industry.

Applauded the President's words in his message to Congress that in labor relations "where there is privilege there must be responsibility" and urged that "this sound principle be enacted in amendment to our present Federal labor law." Mr. Roosevelt said he hoped labor would assume its responsibilities without further legislation.

Hailed the President's recent housing program message and indorsed the Roosevelt proposal that industry, labor and Government work together to reduce the cost of home construction.

Urged substantial modification of the undistributed profits and capital gains taxes, but in order to get a balanced budget specifically refrained from asking any lightening of the tax burden on industry.

Heartily applauded the President's recent statement regarding the railroad situation (apparently his contention they must have more revenue).

Indorsed the President's advocacy of regularization of employment by industry and the viewing of wages from standpoint of annual income rather than hourly rates.

Pledged continued co-operation with respect to social security and continued work toward sound amendment of that law.

Expressed sympathy "with protection of farm incomes through Federal legislation."

Opposed further steps toward pump priming or cheapening of the dollar on the ground that "such measures at this time would seriously interfere with, if not completely prevent, the resumption of fundamentally sound recovery."

Recorded the faith of the council "in the efficacy of the principles of democracy and yet our grave concern over the possible far-reaching effects of the present situation."

Read to Roosevelt.

The statement making these points was read to the President by the youthful, dapper Harriman, erstwhile NRA figure, now chairman of the board of the Union Pacific Railroad, in the presence of the other 48 business representatives who had subscribed to it, Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper and Assistant Secretary of Commerce Ernest G. Draper.

The meeting was held in the Cabinet room, where the President sat in his usual place at the head of the Cabinet table, while his business callers were seated on gold-gilted chairs before him. As Harriman read, the President made notes. These served as the basis for what he said on completion of reading of the statement.

As subsequently revealed by Early, the President's only comment on the "wages and hours" remarks of the business group was that he hoped and wished the study referred to would not be delayed or prolonged to such an extent as to prevent action at the present session of Congress. Apparently he did not indicate whether he would initiate such a study.

Amplifies Remarks.

Early said the President somewhat amplified his remarks of last Friday regarding holding companies, saying he recognized there was a certain amount of mass efficiency in some holding companies and that some holding companies made for mass efficiency and in other ways operated in the public interest.

Commenting on the statement in regard to "public utilities" the President was said to have pointed out that the misunderstanding between himself and that industry affected only about 15 per cent of that industry and that he had no quarrel with the remaining 85 per cent.

Coming to that part of the statement dealing with "labor relations," Mr. Roosevelt was quoted as saying he would be for the listing and reporting of expenditures by labor organizations rather than their incorporation. He expressed hope problems flowing out of the growth of labor organizations could be worked out by common consent rather than by legislation.

The President's comment on the group's observations under the heading of "Flow of Private Capital to Industry" was that one thing the bankers and the investment bankers had failed to do was to establish new machinery which would enable small investors to put their money into new enterprises and into industry generally.

Otherwise, Early said, the President gave general approval to the recommendations in that part of the statement, as he did to the statement as a whole. It was in that part the group declared it to be "of the essence that the public know what forms of business organization meet with the approval of the Administration and are to be encouraged in their development, and what are to be affected by reform."

Concluding the specific comments of the President, Early explained Mr. Roosevelt also told the group he and associates were working with the Business Advisory Council and with the other groups that recently have come to the White House, and will come, toward the establishment of simple machinery in respect to policies, and that such machinery, as all agreed, should represent all the elements which enter into legislative and administrative policy, both from the point of view of geography and different types of interests—business, big and little, labor, finance, distribution, agriculture, transportation, credit, investors and consumers.

Subsequent discussion with Early and Harriman by newspapermen regarding what the President had in mind indicated he was striving toward an informal economic advisory council or committee, comprising all the elements he mentioned, to assist in the forming of national policies.

Frankness Pleases.

Harriman said he could not be placed in the position of interpreting the President's words, but that he did not believe what Mr. Roosevelt told his group, as reported above, had any relation to revival of a modified NRA, or any scheme for planned economy.

The President and his callers engaged in a general discussion of points raised by the council's statement, the present situation and prospects of the future, but this part of the discussion was not revealed either by Early, Harriman or any of the other conferees.

Several of those who participated in the meeting said at the White House, however, that they were pleased and encouraged by the frankness of the discussion and believed the meeting had been a constructive step. They also said they believed the President had been impressed by the sincerity of the council both in pledging co-operation with the Administration and in pointing out objectionable courses of aciton.

The Business Advisory Council was organized in 1933 at the suggestion of Secretary Roper as a liaison group between the Federal Government and the business world.

Full Text of Business Leaders' Message

quarters in sympathy with the objectives that your message indicates.

This council wishes to record itself with you as being in sympathy with the objectives you have so clearly stated, namely, "only legislation to end starvation wages and intolerable hours."

It is our earnest recommendation that a fresh study be made of this subject, and that the representatives of both labor and industry who participated in the administration of NRA be asked to consult with responsible representatives of government before a decision is reached as to the type of legislation which will, in the long run, best accomplish your sound objectives.

Business Practices.

Turning to the problem of abusive business practices which you dealt with in your message to Congress, the council wishes to pledge to you its co-operation in developing legislation in this field. We recognize that the antitrust laws are to an extent outmoded, and that in our present complicated economy it is necessary to be more specific than was found necessary in the past.

We share the views that you have expressed to us on several occasions that the co-operation within industries attempted under the NRA held much that it is desirable to preserve. We also recognize that monopolies and monopolistic practices are incompatible with democracy in this country except in the case of those industries that it is found necessary in the public interest to place under Government regulation.

Holding Companies.

We will gladly work with you toward the principle of geographic decentralization of industry. We decry the use of the holding company for financial manipulations and undesirable extension of control in the hands of a few people. On the other hand, we view with grave concern any general move to outlaw proper holding companies with their many advantages for the public good, or to interfere with the operations of the mass production industries, the economic benefits of which have been so clearly recognized by the people of this country and have been the envy of the civilized world.

We wish to impress upon you our sincere conviction that the first objective in the present situation must be the re-establishment of business activity and re-employment, and that reform of abuses must be conducted with a sympathetic understanding of the functioning of legitimate business.

We have had a committee working for some months on the subject of business laws, and this committee is at your service, and we respectfully urge that it be used by the Administration before crystallizing on policies in this field.

Public Utilities.

We are in sympathy with the objective of the Administration in eliminating the pyramiding of and abuses by holding companies in the public utility field. We are disturbed, however, over the situation that exists between the Administration and the public utility industry, and sincerely hope that a way can be found by which the sound objectives of the Administration and the elimination of abuses can be attained in such a manner that the industry may not be crippled and that the flow of private capital to new necessitous developments can be promptly released.

In addition, we strongly urge that a sound policy be developed as the basis of relations between Government and private enterprise, to the end that the fear of destruction through Government competition may be eliminated.

We know of no one thing which would do more to re-stimulate

our depressed industries than the attainment of a sound solution of the public utility problem in these two respects.

Labor Relations.

Nearly a year ago the council's committee on industrial relations had an opportunity to discuss with you this important subject. The council has accepted the principle of collective bargaining, and is heartened by the words of your message to Congress in which you state that the public demands that where there is privilege there must be responsibility.

We respectfully urge again that this sound principle be enacted in amendment to our present Federal labor law. The council's committee has given continued study to the experience under the act and its administration, and has further recommendations which it is prepared to make.

Housing.

The council wishes to record its sympathy with your proposals in the field of housing and home construction. A year ago the council's housing committee made recommendations in this field which are substantially the same as the proposals that are now before Congress, relating to the extension of financial mechanisms under the Federal Housing Administration. This is an important step in attaining the ends we all seek.

On the other hand, we are equally impressed with the necessity, as you have so clearly indicated, of reducing the cost of home construction. We heartily indorse your plan that industry, labor and government must work together in finding the proper solution of this intricate problem. We pledge you our co-operation to this end.

Flow of Private Capital to Industry.

It is our considered opinion that one of the underlying difficulties of the present situation is that new private capital has not, during the past few years, been flowing into the development of industry in a manner which is considered normal. One of the reasons for this, in our opinion, is certain forms of taxes, a revision of which is now being considered.

With our sincere interest in seeing the Federal budget balanced, we do not propose general reduction of taxes on industry at this time, but we do urge change in the form, namely, substantial modifications of the undistributed profits tax. In the same manner, the capital gains tax, in our judgment, must be modified in order to encourage investment in new enterprises and the development of established industries.

In addition to taxation, the great body of investors of the country, large and small, need reassurance as to the direction reform is to take. It is of the essence that the public know what forms of business organization meet with the approval of the Administration and are to be encouraged in their development, and what are to be affected by reform.

Railroads.

We heartily applaud your recent statement on the railroads, and believe that the re-establishment of a financially sound railroad situation will aid much in the stimulation of business activity and employment.

Annual Wages.

We heartily indorse your urging on industry the regularization of employment, and believe firmly in the principle of viewing wages in industry from the standpoint of the annual income rather than hourly rates. We will gladly co-operate in this direction, and believe that the Administration's leadership can do much in stimulating sound thinking and practice in this connection.

Social Security.

The council has been co-operating with respect to social security, and we are gratified with the record of our committee in this field in the assistance that it has given to the Social Security Board. We believe there are amendments to the law which are important, and we will continue to work in that direction.

Agriculture.

We are sympathetic with the protection of farm incomes through Federal legislation. Our agricultural committee has been in contact with the Department of Agriculture and stands ready to continue in its work.

Monetary Policy.

The recession has led to renewed demands in some quarters for a further cheapening of the dollar and pump priming. We believe the adoption of such measures at this time would seriously interfere with, if not completely prevent, the resumption of fundamentally sound recovery.

We have not attempted to cover all of the subjects that are confronting the country, but merely to indicate our approach to some of the subjects which directly affect business.

In closing, we believe the critical problem before the country is re-employment in private industry. A solution of the subjects that we have enumerated above will go far, in our opinion, to this end. On the other hand, continual study of the subject of re-employment by representatives of industry, labor, and agriculture, in co-operation with Government, we believe would do much to further re-employment, and we stand ready to assist in such a co-operative move.

We wish to record with you our faith in the efficacy of the principles of democracy, and yet our grave concern over the possible far-reaching effects of the present situation. Tolerance and understanding must be used by all sections and interests in the country. We can assure you that businessmen are ready and anxious to co-operate with their Government in solving our present difficulties and working toward a sounder and more secure economy for all of our people.

We have the production machinery, private capital, and technique. The leadership of Government, business, labor and agriculture can properly be condemned by posterity if we fail to work out sound and permanent principles for insuring the continuance of our economic life on a basis that promises the highest possible standard of living for the people of this country. Uncertainties that exist in the hearts of men today must be eradicated. To that end, Mr. President, we look to you to give us the leadership around which we can all rally.

Aide Says TVA Is 'Open' to Buy Private Works

annual report to Congress on progress of rural electrification, noted with satisfaction that "utilities are abandoning the practice of building 'spite lines,' which hampered or destroyed many of the early projects."

"Altered Attitude."

Carmody, citing an "altered national attitude" toward electric service for farmers as responsible for the REA's success in furnishing 250,000 farmers with electricity last year alone, declared "15 or more legal attacks upon the consumer-owned lines have failed in the courts, while nowhere has a legal challenge of a project's right to operate been successful."

In emphasizing the "inequitable position of the farmer even today," Carmody said:

"If five families out of six in the New York metropolitan area or in any other urban and industrial area in the United States were told today that they could not have electricity in their homes and factories, we would undoubtedly witness a new and streamlined Boston Tea Party. But this is precisely what has happened to five out of six farm families."

May's release of the unidentified insurance executive's letter, he said, was prompted by what he described as "statements by Mr. David Lilienthal, majority director and dictator of TVA, that the splendid earning record of TVA's chief private competitor, the Tennessee Electric Power Co., is indicative of the financial soundness of that corporation."

May said the letter "is important because it comes from the source of the chief sufferer from Federal competition, the investor." He promised to make public later "some studies as to institutional losses of bonds and preferred stocks in companies affected by Federal power competition."

The letter said the unidentified company, "on behalf of its 350,000 policy holders, owns nearly $200,000 of the mortgage bonds of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. which serves Chattanooga and Nashville and certain smaller communities." An attached table quoted Poor's Insurance Co. holdings as stating that on December 31, 1935, 13 large insurance companies had invested $6,003,060 in the Tennessee Electric Power Co.'s obligations.

Urged to Liquidate Bonds.

"A Chicago bond house phoned us yesterday with a recommendation that we liquidate our Tennessee Electric Power Co. bonds, which have declined in market price to around 78 cents on the dollar. The reason for their recommendation is the PWA grant to the City of Chattanooga to be used for the construction of a distribution system in direct competition with the existing facilities of the Tennessee Electric Power Co."

He described the probable result as "not only a wasteful duplication of facilities but also a destruction of the savings of policy holders and bank depositors in the existing facilities of the company. Apparently Chattanooga's general credit is not strong enough to stand a bond issue, so the PWA not only had to make its 45 per cent grant but went further and loaned the remaining 55 per cent."

The unnamed executive proposed purchase by Chattanooga of the private company's distribution system at a fair price, purchase of the private company's steam generating station at Chattanooga for standby use, and use by the private company of the purchase prices to retire debt. He concluded:

"Unless some such fair treatment of bondholders is encouraged by the Government and its TVA subsidiary I do not see what incentive there will be for institutional investment managers to lend any additional funds to the utility industry, even if that industry does need $1,500,000,000 for new equipment, the manufacture of which would provide a huge amount of employment."

Lynch Bill Foes Promised Aid From the West

lieutenant of the late Huey Long, held the floor against the bill all day despite the tightened rules. In the end, he gained unanimous consent to proceed again tomorrow.

Proud of his stamina, Ellender, who already has spoken a sum total of 20 hours against the measure since last Friday, declared he could have "talked until midnight" had the Senate not recessed at 5 o'clock. He pointed out that his former chief, Huey, held one of the Senate's long distance speaking records.

When Ellender finishes today (if he does), Senator Theodore G. (The Man) Bilbo, of Mississippi, will take up the opposition fight.

Night Sessions Forecast.

Senate Majority Leader Alben W. Barkley, who has been vainly attempting to bring the bill to a vote, reminded the Senate yesterday it was "in the midst of a filibuster." Consenting to more time for Ellender, he warned he would object to such requests in the future.

A major blow to break the filibuster was forecast for next week by Senator Frederick Van Nuys (Democrat), of Indiana, co-author of the anti-lynching measure. He predicted night sessions will be ordered following return to the Senate of Senator Robert F. Wagner (Democrat), of New York, who has been ill. Van Nuys said a conference will be called between Wagner, Barkley and other friends of the bill to tighten procedure.

The Indiana Senator admitted the failure of debate "cloture" efforts, but renewed his forecast that "the bill will pass."

Respite Promised.

Hoarse-voiced Southern orators will be granted some respite this week-end, when the Senate is expected to recess over Saturday and Sunday to permit Barkley to return to Louisville for a testimonial dinner in his honor. But Connally insisted: "We don't need any rest."

"We have eight fresh men who haven't spoken yet," said the Texan.

The first major move to sidetrack the anti-lynching bill may be attempted next week when an effort is planned to substitute the pending independent offices bill.

Ellender's long-distance speech yesterday ranged from the racial history of Egypt, India and Haiti to the present activity of New York's "Father Divine" in Harlem.

"God pity the South, God pity Mississippi, where they have as many blacks as whites, if Father Divine ever gets control and tells them to rise up," said Ellender.

Moving constantly through the aisles, arms swinging, Ellender criticized Mayor LaGuardia of New York for visiting one of Father Divine's "Heavens" and asking for "help to clean up the city."

"Did he think Father Divine was God?" asked Ellender. "No. LaGuardia wanted votes."

An ice jam which formed in the Hudson River off Newburgh, N. Y., trapped the ferryboat Dutchess, with 20 passengers, for five hours. The vessel was bound from Beacon and only a change in tide which shifted the huge mass of ice allowed the ship to hammer its way to its slip. The season's coldest weather caused the freeze. The ferry was uninjured by the buffeting it received.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Tortured by 'Dear Friend's' Attention to Another Girl, Woman Wonders if She's 'Cry Baby.'

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: For nearly six months a very dear friend of mine has been seeing another girl on an average of three times a week. He did not tell me; I learned of it accidentally. At first, I didn't say anything; tried to act as if it didn't matter. But after months of torture, I broached the subject, saying: "Why not be fair?" He pretended not to know what I was talking about. I let it pass for a few days and then put the question to him direct.

* * * *

He said, "I didn't know you knew anything about it." I said, "You know how much trust and confidence I have always had in you." He explained that he wasn't in love with her; that he was just infatuated; that it was nothing serious; and that he hadn't told me because he thought I would worry unnecessarily. He said he was sorry to have hurt me.

* * * *

At the time, the girl was out of town on a three weeks' vacation, and he said he would have to see her as usual on her return or she would be hurt. When visiting me, he talked of her continually . . . When I objected to his seeing her again, he said she was so soothing to his nerves and that she did everything to make him comfortable. The things he said grieved me more than I can tell, although he cannot understand why I should be hurt, after he has apologized and explained. He thinks I should just forget it.

* * * *

Of course, when he continues to mention her name, it provokes me to say and think unkind things of the girl. All the time he was seeing this girl, he was telling me he was busy with work and personal affairs and couldn't see me as often as before. And I believed him! Do you think I am a crybaby (as he says I am) in not being able to put the other girl out of my mind? Your advice will be appreciated. Sincerely. HEARTBROKEN.

Unprofitable Attitude.'

DEAR HEARTBROKEN: You are displaying a distressing lack of either finesse or forthrightness in handling the situation. In wanly agonizing over the man's interest in the other girl, you are taking a stand calculated to drive him straight into her arms, if anything can.

* * * *

It would have been better if you had (a) either ignored her existence entirely, and the importance she had assumed in his life; or (b) frankly pooh-poohed his transparent excuses of "work and personal affairs," blithely accused him of two-timing you, and asked him why he was making such a guilty secret of the fact, thus robbing the rival romance of much of its significance in either his eyes or yours; or (c) the minute you learned of his deception, staged a rousing lovers' quarrel, laid down the law, demanded undivided allegiance, refused to play second fiddle to any other woman, and taken the consequences with your head high and your pride salvaged.

* * * *

As the situation exists today, you have your choice of taking half a loaf without lamenting, or breaking off with the man altogether. By taking the half loaf without lamenting, I mean to say you would need to adjust yourself cheerfully and unreproachfully to whatever portion of the man's companionship he is willing to give you. It would mean going back, more or less, to the preliminaries of social acquaintanceship—accepting his attentions casually, pleasantly and unpossessively, as you would those of a man who was just beginning to notice you for the first time, and whom you knew had other women friends in his life.

* * * *

Such an adjustment can only be effected by getting yourself another beau or two, and developing sufficient social interests to keep yourself fully occupied seven evenings a week. Though this man may be the most important human being on earth to you, you must—in very self-defense—create the capacity for living without him, if necessary. Only by becoming more or less self sufficient to the extent that you can go on without him, can you hope to recapture his whole-hearted attention. When you are in a position to accept his attentions as a diversion, and not as a necessity, he will be far more eager to tender them.

* * * *

If you expect to continue seeing him, you must develop enough self-mastery to keep both your thoughts and your conversation away from the other girl. I think, too, you would be entirely justified in refusing to listen to his incessant praise of her. The conversation will, almost automatically, take a happier turn when, as and if you acquire new interests and new associations, which always freshen one's outlook, invigorate one's enthusiasms, and remove the sting of old disappointments and disillusionments. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Woman's Page.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

'Wandering Phlebitis.'

I am asked to discuss the subject of phlebitis, particularly the wandering form.

Phlebitis means literally the inflammation of a vein. In the common form it is the inflammation of one of the large veins of the leg, usually one-sided. Appendicitis is a common cause. Typhoid fever is another cause. In fact, any infection inside the abdomen may rest on the large vein which carries all the blood from the leg and produce a clot inside of it. This, of course, embarrasses the return circulation and the leg swells up and is painful. It is often called "white leg" or "milk leg."

Under rest and elevation of the leg it always heals up with the formation of a clot inside. Collateral circulation takes care of the return of blood from the leg. Collateral circulation means practically a detour of blood. A person who has once had phlebitis of this kind, however, is always subject to swelling in the leg whenever an extra amount of walking or running is indulged in.

Another form of phlebitis occurs in middle-aged men, especially, and there is a form of hardening of the veins which is very much like hardening of the arteries. This also is likely to be more troublesome in the legs than anywhere else, causing pain, painful spots and swelling.

Wandering phlebitis is likely to superimpose itself on this form. A typical case of this kind was a man, aged 50, who developed pain in the calf of the right leg. This was slow to mend and a lump was found there which was identified with the vein, and this was cut out surgically. Later he had a similar occurrence in the vein of the forearm and later some abdominal symptoms which were probably due to an involvement of a vein in the stomach. All of these eventually got well, and this is the experience with nearly everyone who had the condition, but it is very stubborn and may run a course of three or four years.

Simple Stitch Manufactures Needlepoint of Heirloom Style

The working of this lovely floral design in softly blended colors, clearly indicated on the pattern, will fascinate you. Make chair seats and backs, foot stool covers, fire screens or pillows. In pattern 6010 you will find a transfer pattern of a motif 9½ by 12 inches and two and two reverse motifs 7 by 7½ inches; material requirements, color chart and key; illustrations of all stitches used.

Matching Your Casual Costumes Provides Variety for Mid-season

By Ethel Ehlen.
The Post Fashion Editor.

IT IS NOT ONLY smart but a lot of fun to match up your own casual costumes for midwinter, and it need not be an expensive procedure, as a survey of Washington stores and shops reveals. You can begin with a tailored suit and add different skirts and jackets, combining solid colors with stripes, checks, and mixtures. In this way your basic suit leads not only a dual but a much more complicated existence, and you give the illusion of an extensive wardrobe. Moreover, all of the ensuing costumes may be worn with smart effect next spring without a topcoat.

Aside from the suit with its varying changes, numerous chic effects may be obtained, starting out with a skirt and jacket and adding other skirts, jackets, boleros, and sweaters. For instance, try a black woolen skirt as the nucleus for such an ensemble, topping it with a black and white checked or striped jacket and then adding bright-colored jackets, a black bolero with brilliant sweaters. Or a patterned skirt may be topped with jackets and boleros of solid colors.

One-piece dresses are excellent foils for jackets, boleros and such, to give the impression of an entire new costume. Why not top your simple black silk or sheer wool with a bright-colored wool jacket, or a black bolero dramatized by a gay gypsy sash or a pristine white gilet of cotton or linen? If you want to be startlingly different, try enhancing your black frock (either silk or wool) with one of the quilted cotton boleros in bright or pastel hues.

Good Manners For Dining

The dinner guests every hostess dreads! They have to stop and think about their manners—and when they forget to think, oh! dear, they're sure to be stabbing rolls and brandishing cutlery like spears.

"My favorite guest is one whose manners I can depend on," says any hostess worth knowing. "If the maid drops a plate or someone tells an exciting story, this guest isn't jolted from her poise. She takes a roll with her fingers and lays knife and fork across her plate when she's not using them—because she knows her etiquette from A to Z.

"If I serve artichokes she's not bewildered. She eats them with her fingers—a leaf at a time. She doesn't put the salt for her celery on the table cloth—but on her bread-and-butter plate. She's the girl I ask to dinner when my husband brings an important guest home.

'When she's introduced she won't rise. She'll smile a cordial how-do-you-do from her chair.

"At the table she'll wait for her partner to seat her—no flopping into her chair before he assists her or before her hostess sits down. She won't titter at compliments. She'll say graciously that it's so nice of him to say those things.

"When our guest takes her home she'd never get out of the car before he does. If he asks her to go dancing at the country club she'd say 'I'll be delighted' and not 'Sure.' She makes a hit—and doesn't she deserve to?"

How does the favorite guest keep posted on etiquette? With our 40-page booklet, "Etiquette for Every Day." Pointers for dances, dinners, movies, motoring.

YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!

By Ida Jean Kain.

WHEN WE were growing up it wasn't considered quite respectable to be stylishly dressed. Now it isn't considered smart to be dressed any other way, and some of the leading Fifth avenue shops have advisers whose mission it is to help women select the clothes that do the most for them.

"The world judges us by appearances and makes its evaluation within the first two minutes of the introduction" . . . so says Renee Long, the girl from the Midwest—Kansas City, to be exact—who is now one of the Fifth avenue fashion dictators on what to wear, according to type.

Recognition of your type is the first step in dressing well, Miss Long says, and she has classified the four basic types as follows: Modern, sculptured, stocky and athletic. There are, of course, weight variations, but these basic proportions determine choice of fabric, the amount of color and large or small accessories. Stature is the cue to the height of your waistline, the size of your belt, the length of your jacket and skirt and the height of your hat.

The full figure, classified by Miss Long as the sculptured or Venus type, should not wear horizontal lines—too flat hats, colored belts or large jewelry. This figure carries an air of importance and vitality, and dress should accentuate these qualities. You destroy the dramatic emphasis by the use of gadgets, chunky jewelry, veils, flowers or furbelows. These dress incidentals may be trickily effective on the small girl, but they are cheapening when used on the large figure. If this is your type, you should wear important-looking clothes, simply cut, and your clothes should mold rather than confine. Extreme care should be exercised in the selection of fabrics. Those that are shiny or bulky are not for this type. Similar rules apply to the short woman, who can easily appear stocky in the wrong clothes.

In contrast to the full figure, Miss Long pointed out, is the small woman who frequently makes the mistake of wearing her clothes too large in the hope that they will add to her size. Unless her clothes are well fitted they make her appear shriveled and emaciated.

You cannot sit at home and decide the type you should like to be, for you have inherited your structure, which is something you cannot change. Dress to dramatize your good points and, with a little ingenuity, you can learn to minimize your bad ones.

Today World Judges You by Appearance in First 2 Minutes.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Jan. 19.

AS THE WINTER struggles to its rappointed end, and we with it, the skating madness which has our bustling village by the heels grows more and more frantic. It will rise to its peak next Monday evening when the Norse elf, Sonja, Henie, whirls out upon the ice of Madison Square Garden, surrounded by a troupe of 85 assistant elves, all on silver runners. All the seats are gone, unless you want to pay a speculator the price of a new dining room suite.

ALICE HUGHES.

The Henie approaches as a newly minted knight (or knightess) of her native land, having just been decorated by her appreciative King. She is not only the idol of the skate-minded mobs, but Gotham society has taken her up, and she will be the honor guest at a very hoity-toity Waldorf supper party after her season's debut on the Garden pond. It must be great to be a Henie—petted, adored, clever at her work, and richer than old Mrs. Croesus!

But don't think for a twink that we are just peering at skaters! Dear no! Every available tennis court and vacant lot in the heart of town has been flooded, and every neighborhood prays nightly for heavy freezing weather. Only the other evening I was one of the guests at a skating party on Mr. Rockefeller's ice, right below the 70-story RCA Building. Cora Scovil, the mannequin wizardess, gave it in honor of her birthdaying nephew, Jerry, and rigged up a blonde, limp dummy labeled "Sonja" with whom the Rockefeller professionals skated! I gave them a few flashes of my famous Manchester, N. H., mill-pond technique, and we had a very fine time.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN: Why, we've even had snow, which for some time has just been something grandpa told us about. Of course, there hasn't been quite enough to permit our poor hemmed-in children to get out their sleds. Which is just as well for me, since there's precious little place for such business save under the wheels of trucks and taxis.

The newest whimsy among rich young ladies here out for the evening is a tiny ermine jacket, with elbow-length sleeves and reaching barely below the bust.

Recent Haworth Column Arouses Storm of Letters

The question, "How Much Freedom Should Adolescent Have?" is one which has provoked storm of letters from readers

When a puzzled mother wanted to know whether she should force a curfew on her 18-year-old daughter, who was starting to get a taste of night clubs and cocktails, Mary Haworth told her that "a bird must be let loose from the nest before it can learn to fly." Then Mary Haworth asked her young readers how much freedom they thought an adolescent should have. Hundreds of letters poured in. From these, Mary Haworth has selected a variety of replies which will be published in a full page in Sunday's Post.

Snow Fails to Dampen Two Cabinet 'At Homes'

Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, Mrs. Daniel C. Roper Hostesses to Throngs Undaunted by Inclement Weather; Notables Glimpsed at Both Parties.

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

Nothing stops Washington society from going a-calling on days when Cabinet hostesses are "at home." Herodotus' words that "Neither snow nor rain nor heat nor gloom stays these couriers from the swift completion of their appointed rounds"—the motto of postmen—could apply as well to the section of Capital society that makes the rounds of Cabinet receptions, no matter what the weather.

HOPE R. MILLER.

If the Secretary of Labor had not called off her "at home," there's no telling what would have happened yesterday. As it was, with traffic snow-jammed all over town, social notables were hard put to it to attend the other two receptions. But they managed somehow. Both Mrs. Henry A. Wallace's apartment at the Wardman Park Hotel, and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper's home on Woodland drive, were as crowded around the tea hour as if the wintry afternoon had been made to order for visiting.

Looking in on Mrs. Wallace's reception first, I wondered whether there would be anyone left to be at Mrs. Roper's. Dropping in at Mrs. Roper's, I found her spacious drawing room, dining room and foyer crowded to the doors, and the line of cars on Woodland drive was four blocks long for well over two hours. William the doughty doorman, holding aloft the biggest black umbrella in Washington, was busy every minute helping mink-coated dowagers out of automobiles and calling chauffeurs through his huge megaphone.

Meanwhile—to shift scenes quickly—the doorman over at the Wardman Park had one of the busiest afternoons thus far this season. And the elevator boy, who took load after load up to Mrs. Wallace's apartment, declared he never had seen so many women before in all his life.

Wearing a trim black crepe frock, cut on simple lines, and a bouquet of Camelias on her shoulder, the pretty wife of the Secretary of Agriculture received her guests in the drawing room with an air of gracious informality that made them feel at home at once.

Assisting her in the drawing room were Mrs. M. L. Wilson, wife of the Undersecretary of Agriculture; Mrs. Harry L. Brown, wife of the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, and Mrs. Wilson Compton. Among those alternating at the tea table were Mrs. Robert H. Jackson, who wore a black ensemble; Mrs. Edwin T. Meredith, who recalled the day when she was a Cabinet hostess herself and "at homes" were rigidly observed each week during the season; Mrs. Charles H. March, Mrs. Mark Bristol, Mrs. J. Harry Covington and Mrs. Donald Richberg, who looked especially lovely in a frock of burgundy velvet with a veiled turban to match.

In the brief time I was there, Mrs. Gilbert Hitchcock, one of Washington's most popular women, was presiding at the coffee urn, while Mrs. John D. Biggers, wife of the head of the unemployment census, was pouring tea. Stopping to chat a few minutes with each of these fascinating ladies, I almost forgot to take note of the beautifully decorated tea table, with its huge bowl of mixed flowers—roses, carnations, snapdragons — in the center, flanked by four jonquil-colored candles in silver holders.

Many Notables At Mrs. Roper's

Most of the guests seen at either reception also attended the other. Thus, when I arrived at Mrs. Roper's, there were many who were either going to Mrs. Wallace's or had just come from there.

Mrs. Roper's long drawing room, where the hostess received, was especially cheery with its crackling open fire and huge vases of Easter lilies and pink carnations artistically arranged in silver vases. Wearing a brown crepe frock with flowing sleeves embroidered in blending shades, Mrs. Roper received her guests and then introduced them down the short receiving line, in which stood Mrs. Ernest G. Draper and Mrs. J. Monroe Johnson, wives of the Assistant Secretaries of Commerce.

Assisting in the drawing and dining rooms were Mrs. Fred Britten, in a floor-length blue velvet gown and a small fur-tipped turban; Mrs. Charles Edward Riggs, Mrs. Alexander V. Dye, in a stunning frock made with an orange-embroidered tunic over a brown skirt shot with gold and blue threads; Mrs. Charles Edward Riggs; Mrs. Conway Coe; Miss Margaret McKenzie and Mrs. James Craig Peacock.

Also assisting were two of Mrs. Roper's daughters—Mrs. David R. Coker, of Hartsville, S. C., and Mrs. Frank Bohn—and a daughter-in-law, Mrs. Fred Roper, Mrs. Bohn chose a long black velvet frock with short sleeves and a collar of ermine. Mrs. Fred Roper's gown of black was embroidered in glod threads and trimmed in gold sequins.

Alternating at the tea table were Mme. Saito, wife of the Japanese Ambassador, whose tailored black frock was trimmed with silver lame; Mrs. William B. Bankhead, Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne, Mrs. Arthur H. Vandenberg, in a black ensemble; Mrs. James F. Byrnes, Mrs. Pat Harrison and Mrs. Robert J. Bulkley.

The table itself was decorated with pink carnations and snapdragons and six candles arranged in sets of three at either side of the center bouquet.

Prominent Women At Both Receptions

Among those seen at one or both receptions were Mrs. Michael MacWhite, wife of the Irish Minister; Mrs. James Clement Dunn, Mrs. Francis Bowes Sayre, Frau Scholz, in a brown ensemble, making the rounds with Mme. Eduard Feer, of the Swiss Legation; Mrs. Truxtun Beale, Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose, in a black frock set off with a green lame collar that blended nicely with her long jade earrings, and the Minister of Siam and Mme. Abhibal Rajamaitri, the latter in a black outfit.

Also, Mme. de Bianchi, wife of the Minister of Portugal, who was accompanied by her daughter, Miss Sibilla Skidelsky; Mrs. Robert L. Doughton, Mrs. Charles L. McLaughlin, Mrs. Mastin White,

Among the subscribers to these concerts are the Czechslovakian Minister and Mme. Hurban; the Minister of Finland and Mme. Jarnefelt; the wife of the Japanese Ambassador, Mme. Saito; the wife of the Hungarian Minister, Mme. Peleyi; Representative Caroline O'Day, Countess Roberti, Mrs. Marriner Eccles, Mrs. George Messersmith, Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, Mrs. Wayne Chatfield Taylor, Mrs. Henry Leonard, Marchesi Capomazza, Mrs. Harold Tittman, Mrs. Marian Warburg, Mrs. Milton King, Mrs. Henry Berliner, Mr. and Mrs. Hans Thomsen, Mrs. Robert Post, Mrs. Richard Southgate, Mrs. Frances Nash Watson, Mrs. Matthew John Whittall, Mrs. Spencer Gordon, Mrs. James Clement Dunn and Mrs. George Garrett.

About the Town

With Dudley Harmon

UNIQUE IN THAT there was practically no small talk and at least seven men to every woman was the cocktail party given yesterday afternoon for the six visiting Governors from New England and the United States Senators and Representatives from that section of the country. Anyone who has the idea that New Englanders don't know how to relax and have a good time should have been at the Mayflower yesterday for this party, which was given under the auspices of the New England Council.

DUDLEY HARMON.

The council, to explain briefly, is an organization for the improvement of economic conditions. The cocktail party followed a conference the six New England Governors had yesterday with President Roosevelt.

• • • •

ONE OF THE FIRST arrivals was Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, looking very smart in a black Persian lamb coat with a matching hat. As usual, she wore two or three fresh flowers pinned to her coat—this time they were crimson and white carnations. Although she is one of the most socially sought-after of all the members of Congress, Mrs. Rogers has so far managed never to miss a roll call at the House.

The Governors present yesterday were Lewis Barrons of Maine, Francis Murphy of New Hampshire, Charles Hurley of Massachusetts—with Gen. Cole, his aide, standing nearby resplendent in uniform and medals; Robert E. Quinn of Rhode Island, who was accompanied by Mrs. Quinn, and Wilbur Cross of Connecticut. Gov. Aiken of Vermont had to leave to keep an engagement in New York.

Gov. Cross, for many years head of the department of literature at Yale University, authored a two-volume work on Lawrence Sterne and a three-volume opus on Henry Fielding before going into politics. This is his second term as Governor.

• • • •

OTHER NEW ENGLANDERS present yesterday, besides the Governors, were Senator H. Styles Bridges, former Governor of New Hampshire; Senator David I. Walsh, of Massachusetts; Representative Ralph Brewster, who served as Governor of Maine before coming to Washington as a Representative; James Hook, of New Haven, president of the council; Senator Frederick Hale, of Maine, and many another.

Gaspar Bacon, of Massachusetts, also was present. He and Mrs. Bacon are residing here this year in the William Donovan house in Georgetown, and Mr. Bacon is doing some newspaper work.

THE WELCOME MAT is certainly being laid out for Mrs. John T. Pratt, who is coming here to visit Mrs. James F. Curtis for the week-end. In addition to the dinner which the Swedish Minister and Mme. Bostrom will give in her honor, there is a similar affair which Mrs. Curtis will hold for her guest on Saturday evening.

Mrs. Pratt has enjoyed a number of "firsts" in her career. She was elected first woman member of the board of aldermen of New York City and in 1922 was elected to Congress from New York—never before had a woman made this particular grade from that State. Pretty and chic, Mrs. Pratt has many friends here who will welcome her back with the greatest pleasure.

• • • •

THINGS TO COME: The dinner which the Ambassador to Turkey and Mrs. John Van A. MacMurray will give on Thursday, January 27, at the 1925 F street club . . . ditto for the Counselor of The Netherlands Legation and Countess van Rechteren Limpurb, who will entertain the following evening, January 28 . . . and then there's the luncheon which Mr. and Mrs. David Finley are planning for Sunday.

The Minister of the Union of South Africa and Mrs. Close have cards out for a tea January 27 in honor of their daughter, Mrs. W. S. Mann, who is arriving from England to visit them. She is the wife of a British Naval officer.

Margaret Cotter Dinner Hostess

Miss Margaret Cotter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Cotter, entertained at dinner in the blue room at the Shoreham last evening for her house guest, Miss Betty Couzens, of Pontiac, Mich. The girls were classmates at the Convent of the Sacred Heart here.

• • • •

Mr. and Mrs. William D. Byron announce the birth of a son at their home in Williamport, Md., Saturday, January 15. The child has been named Louis McComas ton, is now with her grandfather, the late Senator Louis McComas, of Maryland.

• • • •

Mrs. Ralph McKee, of Warrenton, Va., is now with her grandson, Jack, jr., while his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew J. Somerville, are on a cruise to Panama, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. John C. Harding.

Representative's Son Married in Atlanta

Malcom Tarver, jr., son and secretary of Representative Malcolm C. Tarver, of Georgia, was married yesterday to Miss Eldredge Grove in Atlanta at the First Baptist Church.

They left later for New York to sail on a southern cruise. Mr. Tarver was graduated from the University of Georgia. After Congress adjourns, he and his bride will live in Dalton, Ga.

Wilhelm Eickhoff, Charge d'Affaires of the Danish Legation, will entertain at dinner this evening in honor of the First Secretary of the Norwegian Legation and Mme. Irgens, who are leaving this country January 26 for Oslo, where Mr. Irgens will be First Secretary to Norway's Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Other guests at the dinner will be Counselor of the Norwegian Legation and Mme. Galbe, Oluf Tostrup, who will succeed Mr. Irgens, and Mme. Tostrup, both of whom arrived in Washington Tuesday; C. A. R. Wastfelt, attache of the Swedish Legation, and Miss Adele Smith.

Mrs. Copeland Talks At Chevy Chase School

Mrs. Royal S. Copeland addressed the girls of the Chevy Chase School at their weekly assembly yesterday, and afterward was guest of honor at a buffet luncheon at the school, with Miss Lillian Lennards, dean of girls, as hostess.

Each student had a copy of "Mrs. Copeland's Guest Book," which the author autographed. The book, dealing with Washington life and manners, came out last spring.

• • • •

Mrs. J. J. McSwain, wife of former Representative J. J. McSwain, of Greenville, S. C., is the guest of Miss Theresa McDavid at the Roosevelt Hotel.

which will probably work all night tonight, preparing to report at tomorrow's session—Mrs. Roosevelt called on those who had worked long in the cause of peace to keep their youthful spirit—"for there is still much to do."

Tribute Paid Mrs. Catt By Mrs. Roosevelt

This spirit was exemplified in Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, founder and honorary chairman of the Committee on the Cause and Cure of War, for whom this marks the fifty-second year of attending conferences in the cause of woman suffrage and of peace. Mrs. Roosevelt rose in tribute to Mrs. Catt when she had been introduced by Miss Schain, and the conference body, which had already paid such a tribute to the First Lady, repeated it in honor of their distinguished leader, who followed her on the program.

Mrs. Catt advocated a feeling of shame among those who desired peace that nothing had been done to stop war down through the centuries and that all of the achievements of civilization could be wiped out by the war machinery which developed side by side with attainment in constructive fields.

"I have been studying war and its meaning for 25 years, but something recently happened to me quite new. I was ashamed," she said. "I received a Christmas card from a woman friend in Japan who once visited this conference. The card said she was praying day and night for peace all the world around—and I learned between the lines that there were Japanese not fighting China. I was not ashamed of Japan alone, although I know of no war which has had less reason for its existence or which has put more cruelty in its application than that Japan is now waging against China. Japan is now doing what most other nations have done and I was ashamed not for her but for all the nations who have set the example Japan is following."

Beginning with the time when man lived in trees, the veteran peace and suffrage leader brought her argument down to the present, to point out how little progress had been made, and appealed for a new attitude to outlaw war.

Mrs. Rohde Final Banquet Speaker

Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen Rohde, former Minister to Denmark, was the third speaker who addressed the conference, and opened her talk with a tribute to Mrs. Roosevelt as "first in war against injustice; first in peace with honor and first in the hearts of her countrymen."

She cited Denmark as an example of co-operative action to assure security of its people—a plan which involved the sacrifice of its navy and its ship lines to provide for its internal needs.

On the subject of "isolation" she suggested isolating the "germ, international banker" to see what it really is and what its effects may be, and taking a "culture of the Supreme Court to see what would happen if we changed the mixture."

The banquet last night at which delegates were seated by States, was opened to the click of movie cameras. At the head table with speakers and conference chairman, were Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State, and presidents of various national organizations participating.

G. F. Milton Urges Economic Co-operation

George Fort Milton, special assistant to Secretary Hull, one of the speakers at the morning session of the conference, said today nations must choose between war-breeding policies of self-sufficiency and those pointing to peace through international economic co-operation. He cited Secretary Hull's reciprocal trade program—based on equal commercial opportunity for all—as one method by which democracies "can aid the universe to make the choice of peace."

Other speakers in the morning were Quincy Wright, Clyde Eagleton, professor of international law at New York University and George S. Messersmith, former United States Minister to Austria.

Barnet Nover, of The Washington Post; Thomas A. Bisson and Mr. Eagleton were speakers at the round table discussion of the Far East, conducted yesterday afternoon under the chairmanship of Mrs. Augustus Trowbridge. Maj. Gen. John F. O'Ryan, Mrs. Maurice N. Weyl, Colton Hand and Senator George L. Berry spoke at that on "An International Police Force," conducted by Mrs. E. H. Silverthorn; James Trapier Lowe, assistant professor at Georgetown University, and Gardner Jackson, of the Committee to Aid Spanish Democracy, that on Spain, with Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith, chairman; Henry Wolfe, Mrs. Malbone Graham, Mrs. Howard L. Bevis, Mrs. Miles F. Bixler, at that on "Danger Spots in Europe," conducted by Mrs. James Picker, and Paul Scharrenberg and Robert C. Lee, that on the International Labor Organization, conducted by Mrs. Edgerton Parsons.

A tea at the White House followed the round table discussions. This afternoon the delegates will break up into their individual organization groups, meeting at their national headquarters, where there are such in Washington, and in other cases, being entertained by local chapters of their societies.

Women Meet In Chevy Chase

A resolution requesting the Board of Education to establish the same status, rate of pay and equivalent qualifications for high school librarians and high school teachers, was passed yesterday by the Woman's Club of Chevy Chase at its meeting in the assembly hall of the Presbyterian Church.

The action was the result of a study of school libraries by the applied education committee, of which Mrs. Douglas Greisemer is chairman. The committee found librarians were not under the same rating as other teachers.

The club also passed a resolution advocating preservation of historic Decatur House. Miss Ethel Cawood, president of the Professional Writers' Club of the Y. W. C. A., which started the movement to preserve the house, now home of Mrs. Truxton Beale, addressed the civic section of the club last week. The Professional Writers Club interested itself in the house because of its Nation-wide significance as an historic landmark. Tomorrow night, through courtesy of Mrs. Beale, the Writers Club will entertain at "An Evening in Decatur House," with members impersonating great characters in history who have stayed there.

Mrs. Edward Bebbs yesterday was named chairman of the nominating committee to prepare a slate of officers for the April election of the Chevy Chase Club, with Mrs. Elmont Hazard, Mrs. George V. Graham, Mrs. Harry M. Watkins and Mrs. Harry Price other members. Mrs. James Defandorf was appointed chairman of a committee for revision of the by-laws, with Mrs. Edgar Fowler, Mrs. Kenneth D. McRay, Mrs. William Henry and Mrs. George A. Finch.

There was a musical program by Mrs. Marie Deal, soprano and Charles I. Haycraft, barytone, accompanied by Elsie Harvey Weaver. Dr. Ralph Turner, economic historian of the Bureau of Research and Statistics, was speaker of the afternoon on "Social Security."

Dr. Turner traced the change in the life of the average citizen from independent farmer in 1870 to urban wage-earner of today. He followed the cycle of the wage-earners' life from 16 to 65, pointing out the increase in his earning capacity and the factors which finally caused him to need aid which the social security act is designed to give.

Nancy Woodward Is Hostess at Tea

Miss Nancy Woodward was hostess at tea yesterday to members of the junior committee assisting in arrangements for the two concerts being sponsored Saturday by the board of lady managers of the Convent of Perpetual Adoration for the building fund of the institution. April 6 Is Set For Observing U. S. Army Day

President's Letter Backing Program Cites Trouble in World Today.

In indorsing the eleventh observance of Army Day, to be held April 6, President Roosevelt yesterday called attention to "the present disturbed condition of the world."

His letter, addressed to Rear Admiral Reginald R. Belknap, commander in chief of the Military Order of the World War, commended the steadily improving efficiency of the American Army, and added the hope that "the people of the country will take the opportunity afforded by the coming observance to learn more about their Army and its role in the preservation of American peace and security."

The letter follows:

Dear Admiral Belknap:

In the present disturbed condition of the world the observance of Army Day on April 6 of this year will serve to focus the attention of our people on our own national defense. The American Nation is committed to peace and the principal reason for the existence of our armed forces is to guarantee our peace.

The traditional American policy is to maintain only a small regular army, and to rely in an emergency on patriotic citizens called to the colors when our peace and safety are threatened. The national defense act provides that our small regular army shall be the professional nucleus for an expanded force necessary for our protection in a crisis. The National Guard and the Organized Reserves are composed of citizen-soldiers who in time of peace patriotically devote a portion of their time to preparing for their country's defense.

The Army of the United States is one of the smallest in the world. However, I am glad to note that its efficiency is steadily improving. I hope that the people will take the opportunity afforded by the observance of Army Day to learn more of their Army and its role in the preservation of American peace and security.

Very sincerely yours,
FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson

As I have pointed out on many occasions, the average player is entirely too prone to consider a trick as an individual winning card or, in another sense, as an isolated packet of four cards. This view is extremely short-sighted. Tricks must be thought of as links in a chain. Quite true, a player very often holds a card that will win a trick but will have no effect whatever on the other 12 tricks of the hand, which is to say that it will not promote to winning value any other card of the partnership. Just as often, however, an Ace or King will be able to perform the double duty of laying a neat packet in front of the owner and of promoting another packet to follow it. East, in the hand shown below, apparently was unfamiliar with this "double duty" idea.

Match-point duplicate.
West, dealer.
East-West vulnerable.

	♠ A 7 3 ♡ 6 5 ◇ 6 3 ♣ Q J 10 7 4 2
♠ 9 8 ♡ K J 9 3 2 ◇ A 10 8 5 ♣ A 6	North West East South	♠ Q J 5 2 ♡ 10 7 4 ◇ K Q 4 2 ♣ 9 3
	♠ K 10 6 4 ♡ A Q 8 ◇ J 9 7 ♣ K 8 5

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
Pass	Pass	Pass

West, taking warning from the two notrump bid, decided against opening a heart and chose, instead, his fourth-best diamond. East won with the Queen and, delighted that his partner had found his best suit, blithely returned his original fourth-highest diamond. West won with the ten and cashed the Ace, then put East back on lead with the diamond King. Now East belatedly remembered West's opening bid and shifted to the heart ten. But declarer jumped up with the heart Ace and laid down the club King; West could do no better than take his Ace and cash the heart King, for the setting trick. Thus, the defenders received a 50-point penalty. But, considering that at many other tables the East-West teams were permitted to play the hand in two or three diamonds and to score from 90 to 110 points, this particular East-West pair fared badly in the match-point column.

Had East realized the true value of a trick, he would not have sacrificed his King and Queen of diamonds so cheaply. On winning with the diamond Queen he should have jumped at the chance to shift to hearts, his partner's original bid. This would have given quite a different result. Whether declarer went up with the Ace, covered the ten, or merely ducked, West would have established his entire heart suit before dummy's clubs were set up. Instead of beating the contract 50 points, East-West would have taken nine tricks for a score of 200 points, which would have given them a "top."

X-Rays Likened To 'Shrapnel' by Cancer Research

New York, Jan. 19 (AP).—A long-standing puzzle about the value of million-volt X-rays on human cancer was solved yesterday with announcement of a discovery that the high-power rays act like shrapnel shells.

The discovery was revealed in the annual report of the Crocker Institute of Cancer Research, of Columbia University.

X-rays of all kinds destroy cancer only indirectly. The rays explode masses of electrons in a tissue cell, thereby destroying the cell. The million-volt rays drive nearly all the electrons in one general direction, a forward motion like exploding shrapnel.

The practical application on human cancer, the report declared, is to cut down by about 40 per cent the skin burning caused by X-rays. This is because with the million-volt rays few of the electrons are kicked back out of the body to hit the skin. The amount of burn the skin can stand sets the limits to treatment of cancer with X-rays.

Harlan MILLER — Over the Coffee

Suggested menu for a Lincoln Day dinner, as a G. O. P. retort culinary to the Jackson Day dinner:

Radishes and dill pickles, bean soup, Mississippi River catfish, corned beef with poached egg, dandelion green salad with corn bread, apple pie with ice cream, coffee, toothpicks, bicarb.

This would cost about 65 cents a person, and at $100 a plate would net the Republicans about $99.35 times 60 families, or a total of $5,961, by the latest Democratic figures.

* * * *

HALL OF FAME—1.

Who is that tall and lithesome man
With grizzled locks all wavy?
With black string tie, and speech as smooth
As salt and chicken gravy?
My son, he smites the lynching bill
From chin to solar plexus;
He snorts and trembles for the kill:
Tom Connally of Texas.

SENATOR X.

"—a not very radical cabinet"

Undoubtedly the President's messages lose something when he doesn't read them to Congress in person . . . The Republicans don't get half so peeved, for one thing . . . Perhaps they should be recorded and amplified from the dais, or delivered by remote control from the President's study.

* * * *

Alas, I have done Patrick Hurley what seems to be an injustice . . . The dynamic former Secretary of War writes that he does not own the building from which Harry Hopkins sends out the WPA checks . . . I'm sorry; the story seemed too good to be true.

* * * *

Another one of those stories (also from an official source) is that Chesterfieldian Sumner Welles may soon succeed Cordell Hull as Secretary of State, because Mr. Hull would like a rest . . . This, so the story goes, would make Mr. Welles a presidential possibility, though I don't quite follow the reasoning . . . Mr. Welles, the legend goes, attained his magnificent diplomatic poise and calm after a doctor told him once that it would be dangerous for him ever to get excited.

* * * *

CAPITAL CAPRICES: At a big party the other day, one charming and resourceful Cabinet hostess spared her guests some bewilderment by pinning on the walls arrows pointing to the ladies' dressing room.

Overheard at a diplomatic shindig: "She may be a great lady, but she still speaks both French and English with a St. Louis accent."

* * * *

As you catch glimpses of the Roosevelt Cabinet in mass formation on gala occasions such as White House receptions or openings of Congress, you marvel that any regime with which it is connected could possibly arouse polite shudders with radicalism.

"—the Capital's dragons vanish"

Viewed in the flesh, they appear about as radical as so many duPonts . . . It is easy to picture them sitting for a group portrait with Rutherford Hayes, adorned with mutton chops and Whitmanesque beards . . . Radical? Dangerous? . . . Glance at their pictures, gentlemen of the Liberty League, and sleep soundly.

* * * *

WHISPERING GALLERY: One or two gentlemen have appeared at White House functions recently after drinking more than the one requisite advance highball.

Mrs. Royal Copeland, the gifted wife of the Senator from New York, has signed up to write a series of pieces about Senatorial ladies at 15 cents a word.

Technically, it's incorrect to call a Senator just "Senator;" etiquette prescribes "Mr. Senator" . . . But one Senator signs his personal letters "The Sen."

* * * *

Almost invariably every Washington celebrity turns out to be infinitely pleasanter than the advance notices you've heard . . . Either the hearsay about him—or her—has built up a mental image of a dragon or a snob, or else the description has been "Great guy—" with the "but" very plainly implied . . .

* * * *

The Capital's conversational arrows are definitely dipped in malice, gentle or corrosive . . . This life here is one continuous adventure of going forth to meet dragons and seeing them change into prince charmings before your very eyes . . . It's dangerous to form any mental images based on hearsay.

Board Approves Coolidge School

Satisfied the new Calvin Coolidge High School for Fifth and Sheridan streets northwest will bear no resemblance to a "factory" or a "box," members of the board of education yesterday formally approved plans as drawn up by Nathan C. Wyeth, municipal architect.

Wyeth appeared before a meeting of the board with a model of the proposed school and pointed out that in addition to the building's "unfactory-like" lines it will be capped by a pitch roof and a cupola.

Winter Paints White House Landscape and Gives Youth a New Playground

Soft white snow and lights last night made the White House a place of beauty surpassing its customary magnificence.

Snow was young Washington's playground yesterday. Ralph Kaiser, 10, felt so good he washed the face of Bobby Lentz, 10.

First Lady Poses With Tiny Cripples At District School

Several excited crippled children posed with Mrs. Roosevelt yesterday for a sound movie which will be circulated throughout the country as part of the infantile paralysis campaign. The pictures were made at Langdon School, Twentieth and Franklin streets northeast, one corridor of which is occupied by crippled students.

As the cameras started to grind, Mrs. Roosevelt turned to blonde Arden Green, aged 6, and asked her how she was feeling. Arden responded, "I can walk down the corridor alone but I can't walk upstairs without holding on but I can walk upstairs with holding on."

District Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, chairman of the local President's Birthday celebration committee, and Richmond B. Keech, executive vice chairman, greeted Mrs. Roosevelt at the school.

Others who accompanied Mrs. Roosevelt on her tour of inspection were Mrs. Malin Craig, wife of the Army chief of staff; Mrs. George Pettengill, wife of the commandant of the Navy Yard; and Mrs. Thomas Holcomb, wife of the commandant of the Marine Corps.

Merit System Aid Is Pledged By Roosevelt

President Affirms Policy of Extensions 'Upward, Outward, Downward.'

President Roosevelt, recognizing the Civil Service Commission's fifty-fifth anniversary celebration, yesterday renewed support of legislation for extension of the merit system.

In a public statement, he held that a sound personnel program was "one of the most important constructive steps in the improvement of Government administration today."

"In recognition of National Civil Service Week and the fifty-fifth anniversary of the enactment of the Federal civil service act of 1883, I am glad to state once more my convictions with regard to the merit system for the Federal Government," he said.

"I have recommended and I support legislation for the extension of classified civil service upward, outward and downward. I have recommended and I support the policy for extension of the classification act to insure equal pay for equal work in the field services.

"I have recommended and I support legislation to perfect the merit system in the central agency and in departments with ample safeguards to insure the proper use of discretionary powers needed by those who shall administer the system.

"I conceive the establishment of a sound national personnel program to be one of the most important constructive steps in the improvement of Government administration today."

Capital Woman, Kills Self by Gas

Mrs. Leona B. Hansen, 40 was found dead yesterday in the gas-filled kitchen of her apartment in the 2700 block of Q street northwest. Gas poured from four open jets in the stove.

Discovery of the body was made by Theodore Torrance, colored janitor, who was searching for a gas leak.

Mrs. Hansen's husband, Alfred Hansen, who was working in Pittsburgh, Pa., was notified of his wife's death by telephone. Residents of the building said Mrs. Hansen had been in ill health. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued a certificate of suicide.

Citizens Elect Batchelder in Chevy Chase

E. S. Hege, President for 3 Years, Made Delegate to Federation.

Winthrop E. Batchelder was elected president of the Chevy Chase Citizens Association last night to succeed Edwin S. Hege, head of the organization for the last three years.

Other officers elected were Donald N. Carpenter, first vice president; Donald L. Luxford, second vice president; George E. Dieffenbach, secretary and treasurer; J. Gordon Steele, assistant secretary. Hege and George E. Strong were named delegates to the Federation of Citizens Associations.

In his annual report Hege, retiring president, pointed out that in the last year the association had opposed the business privilege tax and any increase in the real estate tax and favored instead the institution of a retail sales tax. He also declared that measures needed to be taken to alleviate crowding and provide better ventilation on buses operating between Chevy Chase and downtown.

Inspector William E. Holmes, of the Metropolitan Police traffic department, asked for co-operation in promoting traffic safety.

The Southwest Citizens' Association adopted a program for its president, Harry S. Wender, to present to Congress. Points included requests for removal of restrictions on the Jefferson Junior High School appropriation, for additional police in Washington, and especially in the Southwest section, and for an increase in the Community Center allotment so that outside activities at the school may be continued on a six-day a week basis.

The association indorsed recommendations for an overpass at Fourteenth and Water streets southwest, for a health center in the Southwest and for a $100,000 appropriation for Hoover Playground.

Wage Conferees To Hear Citizens

Civic organizations and private citizens will be given an opportunity to testify tomorrow at the minimum wage conference on women workers in hotel, restaurant and allied industries, Board Chairman Mrs. William Kittle announced yesterday.

Meeting at the District Building yesterday, the conference heard final testimony from waitresses employed in hotels.

The conference agreed that as employer and employe groups had had the opportunity to present witnesses on their behalf the public had the same right.

Mrs. Ribert Leonard, representing the District of Columbia League of Women Voters, told the conference her organization was opposed to the proposal that tips to the waitresses be included in consideration of the minimum scale.

Miss Virginia Morgan, representing workers in a chain of tea shops, opposed any type of minimum wage.

"The girls who work with me are satisfied the way things are now," she said. "I feel that we will be put out of our jobs if a minimum wage is set."

George McPike Wins Prize at SoutheasternU.

Roy Newbold Is Second in Public Speaking Class Contest.

George V. McPike, student in the public speaking class at Southeastern University, last night won the public-speaking contest held by the university at its headquarters in the Y. M. C. A. Building, 1736 G street northwest. His subject was "Politics and the Depression."

The speaker criticized recent talks by high New Deal officials who attacked big business as cause of the depressoin, defending big business as generally sound.

Roy J. Newbold, a senior in the school of accountancy at the university, won second place, using the subject, "Roosevelt the Builder." Thomas P. Gary, seeking a master of laws degree at the university, was third. He spoke on "Government Employes Union." Each winner was presented with a silver loving cup by Dr. James A. Bell, the university president.

Dr. Bruce L. Melvin, professor of public speaking, presided at the contest, a feature event at the close of each semester. Judges were Joseph K. Moyer, dean of the school of accountancy of the university; W. P. Spanton, a Department of Agriculture official, and Ross H. Snyder, law professor at Southeastern.

In addition to the winners speeches were made by Frank P. Abbott, Ralph Hardy, Edward O'Brien, Ruby Schofield, George Sheppard, Jean Smith, Lane Smith and Alan Weil.

Dr. Bell announced two new classes in public speaking will start next Wednesday. One will be taught by Dr. Melvin and the other by Representative Jennings Randolph, of West Virginia.

N.B.C. Studios Here To Have Orchestra

The National Broadcasting Company will maintain a staff orchestra of the 15 most competent and versatile musicians in this vicinity as a permanent feature at "Little Radio City" studios in the Trans-Lux Building, was announced yesterday.

Rudolph Schramm has returned from New York to direct the new orchestra. Rehearsals were called Monday but the orchestra may not be heard until next week.

Fish Will Ask Quiz on Carol's Purge of Jews

Promises Hebrew Group He Will Seek Action This Week.

Bitterly attacking treatment of Jews in Europe as "rank injustices inflicted for no sound reason," Representative Hamilton Fish, jr., of New York, last night told members of the Brotherhood of the Washington Hebrew Congregation that he planned to propose a resolution in Congress this week requesting the President to submit facts to the Congress on "the Jewish situation in Rumania."

"There are only about 600,000 Jews in Germany now as compared with more than 1,500,000 in Rumania, who are constantly subjected to insults and discrimination," he said.

"Consistency by our Government would be shown," he said, "if we were to follow in the footsteps of my grandfather who more than 60 years ago attacked the anti-Jewish movement in Rumania."

Fish's grandfather, Hamilton Fish, served as Secretary of State under President Grant and was vigorously opposed to anti-Jewish sentiment.

The Representative declared that, following a report of the President on the situation in Europe, he would "insist that the Government demand an end of the rank injustice shown Jews in Rumania."

Social Agencies Join Plea for More Idle Aid

House Group Told Budget Allocation Insufficient to Meet Needs.

Social agencies joined with District welfare officials in pleading with the House sub-committee on District appropriations for an increase in unemployment relief funds as hearings neared a conclusion.

Chairman Collins listened to numerous witnesses back up the request for more money than the amount recommended by the Budget Bureau, but he indicated he still was unconvinced that the appropriation should be increased.

A number of persons will be heard this morning, before the hearings are concluded. The bill is due to be reported to the House next week.

The public assistance division was the last of the departmental estimates considered.

Welfare officials argued that the $900,000 for direct relief, plus $500,000 for social security benefits, would be insufficient to meet anticipated needs.

They called particular attention to the recent increase in unemployment and the fact that the appropriations act for the last several years has made no provision for aid for destitute employables.

Rivers Group Gets Md. Plea For Flood Aid

Bladensburg Peace Cross Included in Projects Submitted.

Arguments in behalf of flood control projects to protect Cumberland, Md., and the Anacostia Valley, notably at the Bladensburg Peace Cross, were presented to the projects committee of the National Rivers and Harbor Congress yesterday by Maryland officials.

Included in the delegation were Senator George L. Radcliffe, Representative David Lewis, who is a resident of Cumberland, and Prince Georges County officials.

The committee will meet in executive session at 9 a. m. today to make recommendations on the Maryland and hundreds of other projects throughout the country. Its report will be submitted tomorrow to the thirty-third convention of the Rivers and Harbors Congress, opening today at the Hotel Mayflower.

Barkley Hits Economics.

Meanwhile, while Senate Majority Leader Alben Barkley anounced his opposition to any Government policy which seeks to economize at the expense of necessary flood control work.

Addressing the Mississippi Valley Flood Control Association, Barkley cited the $400,000,000 property damage of the 1937 floods in the Ohio Valley. Louisville, metropolis of his home State of Kentucky, was among the worst hit cities.

"It may be cheaper to sidetrack meeting this problem for the time being, but I am opposed to such a policy of economy," he declared.

Favor Control Program.

Senator Overton, of Louisiana, president of the association, and Senator Copeland, of New York, also stressed the expediency of flood control expenditures. The latter said:

"I wouldn't balance the budget at the expense of a project of proven necessity. Flood control money is not wasted. It adds to the national wealth."

Copeland sponsored the 1936 omnibus flood control act and Overton is the author of an act that would protect the Lower Mississippi against inundation.

"We shouldn't balance the budget," the Louisianan said, "if injustice is done to people in certain localities or by imperiling millions of dollars in property and lives."

Refrigeration Plant Blast Injures Oiler

Matthew Neal, 42, an oiler at the Terminal Refrigeration and Warehouse plant, Twelfth and F streets southwest, suffered severe lacerations to his left hand when a metal bonnet was blown from an airline at the establishment late yesterday.

At Emergency Hospital physicians said Neal, who lives in Clarendon, Va., was not in serious condition. The accident halted traffic for several minutes around the plant.

Clark Griffith

50 Years in Baseball

By Shirley Povich

Griffith Out of Work When Oakland Pay Strike Brings Disbandment of Team; Signs With 'Anson's Colts' at Season's End.

Chapter Five.

THE ROLE OF A HERO in Missoula, Mont., did not exactly satisfy Clark Griffith, who had tasted of big league life in his brief experience with St. Louis and Boston in 1891 and he asked for a return to the major leagues. But he had been tabbed by National League clubs as a pitcher with a chronic sore arm, and no major league offers came his way.

When an offer came from the Oakland club of the Pacific Coast League, in the spring of 1892, Griffith decided to cast his lot with that club and hoped thus to draw once again the attention of big league managers.

At Oakland, even as at Milwaukee, where he was on the same team with Jimmy McAleer, young Griffith met up with another man who in later years was to precede him as manager of the Washington club. Oakland's star second baseman of 1893 was Joe Cantillon. The two became fast friends.

But the minor leagues of the nineties were fly-by-night circuits, loosely organized and unstable. Despite the fact that Oakland, benefiting hugely by Giffith's recovery of his pitching form, was leading the league by a wide margin in August, Owner Robinson was unable to meet the pay roll.

The denouement occurred on an August afternoon in San Francisco, where the Oakland team was scheduled to meet the San Francisco club. Unpaid for weeks, the Oakland players revolted, with Griffith taking the lead, and advised the club owner they would not take the field unless their back pay was forthcoming.

Griffith Leads Strike of Oakland Players.

FIVE THOUSAND PERSONS were in the stands awaiting the start of the game, but the Oakland players, in their dressing room, were adamant. The Oakland team had the sympathy of the San Francisco press, which was natively hostile to the Oakland ownership. And the late Charley Dryden, sports editor of the San Francisco Chronicle offered to address the crowd from home plate, explaining the reasons for the strike.

Dryden's speech, excoriating the Oakland owner and praising the Oakland players for their stand, was well received by the Frisco fans and they broke into a cheer as Griffith and his teammates walked from the park to their carriages.

ADRIAN "POP" ANSON, pilot of the Chicago team that hired Griffith in 1893.

The league broke up with that turn of events and Griffith found himself out of a job. And, what is more, dead broke.

Those were hard times for young Griffith. He was literally on the bum. In the inevitable custom of young hoboes, he found a pal to "bum with." Joe Cantillon, similarly out of a job, was not averse to "hitting the road" with Griffith. It was natural, in those times, that they would drift to California's Barbary Coast.

In a honky-tonk musical hall, Griffith and Cantillon finally found work. The wild-Indian yells he had learned in his native Missouri country stood young Griffith in good stead. He gained a job as a "bad Indian" in a Barbary Coast "mellerdrama," and Cantillon, playing the role of a cowboy in the same skit, emptied a six-shooter at Griffith three times each night. Griffith bore up well under the blank-cartridge attack and submitted readily to being "slain" with great freqeuncy, that virtue might triumph and he might eat.

Young Pitcher Offered Job With "Anson's Colts."

THE NEWS OF THE DISBANDMENT of the Pacific Coast League apparently did not reach the East for weeks, because it was not until late August that Griffith received from Chicago a telegram offering him a job with the Chicago team of the National League.

His old friend, James A. Hart, had remembered Griffith. Hart, manager of the Milwaukee club back in 1888, had hired Griffith away from the Bloomington team when the little right-handed pitcher beat Milwaukee in an exhibition game. Now the president of the Chicago club, Hart was not forgetting the little pitcher who had served him so well with Milwaukee.

Telegraphing Hart to send transportation money, Griffith reached Chicago in September, three weeks before the season ended. He figured in three games for Chicago that season, losing his opening game to Philadelphia, 7-3, on September 7, 1893, but beating the same club a week later, 12 to 5.

Griffith took the mound again for Chicago just before the season closed, pitching in a relief role against the Washington club, in Washington. It was the first appearance of Griffith in the city that was to bring him his greatest fame.

The Chicago team of that era was the first of the colorful ball clubs. Managed by Adrian C. (Pop) Anson and owned by A. G. Spalding, the Chicago club represented the apex of big-league style.

The big, blond Anson . . . a hefty, towering Scandinavian . . . had been captain and manager of Chicago for 16 years when Griffith joined the team in 1893. The peer of all first basemen, Anson had won fame as the greatest batter in baseball history and four times led the National League.

In 1879, Anson broke the National League batting record of .403, batting .407 and, in 1887, he raised those figures to .421. Those were the years, however, when bases on balls were recorded as hits by the batter.

Fate, in Tragic Form, Again Turns Griffith's Life.

UNDER ANSON, THE CHICAGO TEAM . . . then variously called the Cubs, the White Stockings and Anson's Colts . . . had a flair for showmanship. Original and startling uniforms were the hobby of Anson. He outfitted his team with wide Dutch pants of dark hue and equipped his players with checkered bathrobes for dressing-room use.

In one season, the Chicago team actually appeared in dress suits . . . and played in them, white bosoms and all . . . after taking off their fish-tail coats and fancy waistcoats.

Anson's teams, backed by the rich Spalding, considered the conventional omnibus in which other teams rode to the park as beneath their dignity. Nothing less than open broughams, four players to each, would suffice to carry the Colts to the ball park, and, before each game, they marched in military fashion to home plate for batting practice.

But in that season of 1893, Griffith had earned only three weeks' pay from the Chicago club and the close of the campaign found him a penniless fellow torn between a desire to take a fling at cow-punching in Montana and the temptation to "bum around" on the Coast.

Fate took a hand in that dilemma and Griffith went to the Coast.

The Boston team had won the National League pennant that season and was en route to California for a series of exhibition games when tragedy visited the club at Wellsville, Kan.

Charlie Bennett, Boston catcher, had stepped off the train at Wellsville to speak with a friend and, in attempting to reboard the moving train, fell under the wheels. He suffered the loss of both feet. Kid Nichols, star Boston pitcher, remained in Kansas with Bennett and the team proceeded to the Coast with only one pitcher on the squad.

Then it was that Griffith was invited to make the exhibition tour of the Pacific Coast with the Boston team. And it was in that season that Clark Griffith invented the screwball.

TOMORROW: The story of how an accident was mainly responsible for the development of Clark Griffith's scrtwball.

Londos and 'Dropkick' Murphy Headline Mat Program Tonight

JIM LONDOS.

SAMMY STEIN.

Two of the most colorful wrestlers in the business will appear on the same card at Turner's Arena tonight when Jim Londos meets "Dropkick" Murphy and Sammy Stein meets a guy named Kulkovich. Sammy, the handsome boy on the right dressed like a safari sahib, is shown in the uniform he wore in the movie "Lost Patrol."

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Jim Londos, "world's international wrestling champion," and Dr. John (Dropkick) Murphy, of Boston, headline tonight's mat show at Arnica Hall.

It will be Londos' second appearance here since he fell heir to the "international" crown, a title he was fortunate to obtain, titles being what they are in the mat game. Billy Bartush, the unmasked marvel, was his unwilling victim on that occasion.

Dr. Murphy happens to be a specialist in anatomy and dissection without benefit of medical instruments, but his foot, as his title implies, is his principal and most effective weapon.

Murphy, however, knows one or two other holds, as you will see tonight. The Greek's airplane spin still leaves 'em dizzy, and usually on the flat of their respective backs. But Jim's scheduled to get a boot of two in the midriff before he gets his licks in.

A 30-minute jiu-jitsu match, involving Kiman Kudo, an expert from the auld country, and Dick Daviscourt will inaugurate the program.

Other 30-minute preliminary bouts include Sammy Stein (not the old G. W. basketball star) vs. Henry Kulkovich; Chief Chewacki, vs. John Grandovich, and Pat Meehan vs. Hans von Blumberg.

Stein is angling for a bout with Londos; Chewacki is on probation for using a stove-pipe to subdue his last opponent and Meehan is just beginning an American tour.

Londos has been pinning opponents with alarming regularity since returning to harness, and it is inconceivable that he'll lose tonight, especially to a chap of Murphy's caliber. The latter drew with Kimon Kudo a week ago, although he has done very well for himself in other matches. Londos, however, figures to block the Irishman's attempted drop kick and then give him the works.

Orange Five Beats Penn

Stewart's Last-Minute Goal Wins, 42-39.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Jan. 19.—Bob Stewart, Syracuse forward, sank a one-handed hook shot after dribbling the length of the floor in the last 15 seconds to give the Orange an exciting 42-to-29 victory over the University of Pennsylvania basketball team tonight.

A crowd of 4,500 saw Penn tie the score at 39-39, with a minute to go on Gerry Seeders' long shot only to see Stewart grab the ball off the Quakers' back court and dribble down the center of the floor, faking three Penn players who tried to stop him.

Norman Leavitt, Syracuse substitute, was fouled as the game ended and he made good the charity toss for another point.

Riggs Wins Over Tolley

Tampa, Fla., Jan. 19 (U.P.).—Favored standing of Bobby Riggs, youthful Los Angeles star, in the Dixie tennis tournament was threatened today as second-round competition was completed.

Riggs was forced to use his most powerful game in defeating George Tolley, of Miami, 6—2, 4—6, 6—2. The California star won the first set without difficulty, but Tolley volleyed him into defeat in the second set. Riggs came back stronger to win the third set.

Meantime, Bryan Grant, of Atlanta, and picked to be Riggs' finals opponent, advanced to the third round without difficulty, winning his second-round match from Bill Hardie, of Miami, 6—2, 6—2.

Elwood Cooke, of Portland, Oreg., won from Wilmer Hines, of Hollywood, Calif., 6—2, 7—5.

Livingston, Phebus Sign 1938 Contracts

Two more names were added to Washington's 1938 baseball roster yesterday when Catcher George Livingston and Pitcher Ray Phebus returned their signed contracts to Clark Griffith.

Livingston, a promising rookie, was obtained from Chattanooga in negotiations immediately preceding the franchise of that club from Washington to Joe Engel. He is expected to be the No. 2 catcher behind Rick Ferrell. Phebus came up near the end of last season and was nothing less than sensational in his few appearances on the mound.

Crowder Is Victim In Cue Tourney Upset

Jim Pinney scored a stunning upset in the three-cornered billiards tourney in progress at the Royal Academy by nosing out Jerry Crowder last night, 35-33. It was Crowder's second setback in tournament competition. The match went 77 innings. Gene Flynn strengthened his position at the top of the rankings by whipping George Hutchison, 35-26.

Miss Hellman Leads.

Miami Beach, Fla., Jan. 19 (AP).—Lillian Hellman, who wrote "The Children's Hour," took the lead today in competition for the Rod and Reel Club's $1,500 sailfish trophy with a 59-pound catch. The competition runs to April 17. John H. Teves, of Brooklyn, N. Y., won last year with a sailfish weighing 82 pounds 12 ounces.

Two Sets of Twins Will Race as Team

New York, Jan. 19 (AP).—Elmer and Delmer Brown and Wayne and Blaine Rideout, two sets of running twins from North Texas State Teachers College, will run as a medley relay team February 5 in the thirty-first annual Millrose A. A. games.

They will compete against Manhattan College, Indiana and Ohio State, with Delmer taking the quarter-mile leg, Elmer the 220, Wayne the half-mile and Blaine the mile.

Wrestling Bout Ends In Double Knockout

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 19.—The feature wrestling match between Sammy Stein, 218, New York, and Gino Martinelli, 200, Italy, ended in a double knockout at the Coliseum tonight when Martinelli, in attempting a flying tackle, was met head-on by Stein. Both grapplers hit the canvas and were counted out in 12:19.

Navy Beats Gettysburg By 36 to 31

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 19.—The Navy basketball team defeated Gettysburg here this afternoon, 36 to 31, after the Bullets had taken early lead of three points, fallen behind by 19-16 at the end of the first half, and regained the lead with a 12-point run early in the second.

Capt. McFarland, Gillette and Ghesquiere figured in a final dash which gave Navy a 5-point edge.

The game was one of the most exciting seen here for years and for the most part was well played. Bommer and O'Neil scored on long and side shots for the visitors, and the latter's shooting from the line was deadly. His three successes from the floor and seven from the line made Bommer the high scorer of the game.

The Navy led at the half, 19-16.

Less than a minute after the start of the second period, Lynch dropped a field goal for the Navy, giving it a 5-point lead, the biggest margin up to that time. However, the Navy players froze after this score, while Gettysburg, with O'Neil leading the way, tallied an even dozen points, before the Navy got into the game.

Behind by 21-28, the Navy fought its way to victory though there were casualties by the way, including towering Frank Lynch, its center, who retired by the four-personal route.

J. Schwartz Takes Title

Wins Handball Crown in 7 Straight Victories.

Sweeping through nine weeks of play in the Y. M. C. A. handball tourney without the loss of a single match, Jack Schwartz definitely proved his right to the District's No. 1 ranking as a result of last night's final round.

Taking the singles crown with seven victories in as many starts, Schwartz added to his laurels by teaming with Paul Pearlman to collect five straight wins and the No. 1 doubles ranking.

George Wendlandt grabbed the No. 2 spot with six wins as against two losses, while L. C. Moore's record of five wins out of eight starts entitles him to third place. The Woodward-Vineberg combine copped the No. 2 doubles ranking with three victories and two defeats, with the Goldstein-Nash team taking third place with two victories out of four starts.

Last night's results:

Schwartz defeated Moore, 14-21, 21-9, 21-11; Payne trounced Mangan, 21-19, 21-17; Wendlandt upset Engelhardt, 21-14, 21-16; Goldstein-Nash beat Woodward-Vineberg, 21-12, 21-15; Wondrack-Engelhard whipped Payne-Berman, 21-18, 21-17, and Gillette defeated Wondrack, 21-18, 8-21, 21-15.

Larry MacPhail Begins Duty As Boss of Brooklyn Dodgers

By Alan Gould.

Associated Press Sports Editor.

New York, Jan. 19.—Red-headed Leland Stanford (Larry) MacPhail, the man who introduced night baseball, usherettes and modern color schemes to the big league at Cincinnati, today became executive vice president of hte Brooklyn Club.

MacPhail signalized his return to the game by signing a three-year contract at $20,000 per year. He left the Reds in November, 1936, after being general manager of the club for three seasons, lifting it from eighth to fifth place in the National League, and startling old-timers with his innovations. He has been in the banking business at Grand Rapids, Mich., during the past year.

MacPhail has been given full authority to reorganize the strife-torn and financially-harassed Dodgers, together with their "farm system," but the first thing his interviewers wanted to know today was:

"What's going to happen to Van Mungo?"

"First let me say that I'm willing to trade anybody connected with the club, including Manager Burleigh Grimes or MacPhail, if it will help the team," replied the new head man.

"At least three or four National League clubs want Mungo and have either made us definite propositions or—like St. Louis—offered to meet or better any rival proposition.

"Yes, if we could get what we wanted, we would trade Mungo across the river to the Giants. But we want players—not cash. The Brooklyn club now is in a position to go into the market and bid for desirable players. Mungo is a great pitcher and he will stay with Brooklyn unless we can make a deal for him that we feel sure will strengthen the team.

"The directors already have turned down one offer for Mungo, from the Chicago Cubs, because it involves more cash than player value."

MacPhail will confer shortly with Manager Grimes, probably next week at Grand Rapids, on the possibility of making some player

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 19.—George Washington University, the last of the Eastern collegiate basketball Titans, left the ranks of the unbeaten tonight. Playing before an audience of 1,000 which packed the tiny Brooklyn College of Pharmacy gymnasium to the wall bulging point, the Colonials were vanquished 35 to 25 by Long Island University.

The defeat brought to an end the six-game streak the Colonials piled up since their campaign started against Baltimore a little more than one month ago.

As was the case a fortnight ago when Georgetown lost to N. Y. U., another hero rose from the ashes of the defeat of a District team by a New York squad. Against N. Y. U. it was Joe Murphy, the West New York, N. J., lad who piled up 18 points to become the standout performer in Madison Square Garden that night.

Tonight it was Tommy O'Brien, the Colonial who learned the rudiments of the game at Union Hill High in Woodcliffe, N. J., who drew cheers from the most rabidly partisan of the L. I. U. rooters. Tommy, who started at forward and played right through the entire game, garnered the corner of the court, and was in on virtually every one of the George Washington scoring plays.

Bill (Dolly) King, strapping Negro sophomore guard, stood out for L. I. U. with 12 points. King did a fine job of guarding the Washington pivot player every time the Colonials sought to shake a man loose under the basket. He was restricted himself to three field goals but his accuracy from the foul line manifested itself through six additional points. He took individual honors for L. I. U. with 12 points.

George Washington led 4 to 3 in the early moments of the first half, but L. I. U.'s familiarity with its own bandbox court began to assert itself and the Blackbirds forged into a lead which they never relinquished. O'Brien got his first goal when L. I. U. led, 11 to 4, and it was mainly through his efforts that the Colonials managed to keep within hailing distance of their New York foe, 17 to 12, at the half.

George Washington outplayed L. I. U. in the early minutes of the second half, but its shooting was off, the Colonials did everything, and did it well—except score. L. I. U. was using a two-up and three-back zone defense which forced the Washington operatives to fire from medium and long range.

Had the Colonials been able to penetrate this defense they would have brought the high-flying Blackbirds down in short order. They had the ball more often than L. I. U. and shot it with greater frequency, but as far as the Colonials went—O'Brien excluded, of course, there might just as well have been a heavy metal lid on the L. I. U. goal.

The Colonials equalled L. I. U.'s 4-goal total in the second half, but were outscored from the penalty stripe, 10 to 5.

DiMaggio Will Argue for More Money.

By Shirley Povich.

Giuseppe DiMaggio is sniffing with some disdain at the salary of $25,000 the Yankees are offering as his 1938 wage. At Chicago the other day he hinted broadly that he wanted more money. Said DiMaggio: "I want more money." And there is a well-defined suspicion that the Yankees are prepared to tilt their original offer.

POVICH.

Signor DiMaggio set something of a record for rookies in his first two seasons in baseball. He haggled with the Yankees over salary terms during the winter of 1935-36 until he wrested an $8,000 contract out of 'em, thus becoming the highest-paid freshman in major league history. Last winter he held out for a $15,000 contract and was successful, thus establishing something of a mark for second-year performers.

It is a pretty general opinion that at least two other clubs in the league could have beaten out the Yankees last season if DiMaggio were on their teams. DiMaggio knows his value to the Yankees and vice versa. The Frisco Kid has already gained a big point in his salary argument for 1938. He has been granted an interview with Col. Jake Ruppert, owner of the club.

Ruppert does not trifle with the run-of-the-mine Yankee stars. Few players in Yankee history have been privileged to talk salary terms with the New York owner. Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Bill Dickey and Lefty Gomez, Ruppert personaly signed to contracts. Now Joe DiMaggio joins that company. The lesser lights in the Yankees lineup negotiate with Business Manager Ed Barrow.

Enjoys High Salaries.

Ruppert, strangely, enjoys signing his stars at big money. When he gave Babe Ruth that $80,000 contract ten years ago, Ruppert appeared the happier of the pair when they performed at the signing ceremonies.

To Tony Lazzeri, his San Francisco neighbor, DiMaggio owes that $8,000 contract he wrung out of the Yankees in 1936. Lazzeri sponsored DiMaggio from the beginning of his salary negotiations, pointing out that any player who the Yanks were willing to buy for $50,000 could expect more than the usual rookie's wage.

But last year his older brother, Tom, took over DiMaggio's salary affairs with the Yankees, and not until the New York club came through with a $15,000 offer did his big brother permit DiMaggio to sign. This year ago, DiMaggio cheerfully admits that the Yankees' salary offer must satisfy, firstly, Tom DiMaggio.

With his earnings, DiMaggio has set himself up in business at Frisco. He is the proprietor of a $50,000 cafe that boasts a $15,000 cocktail lounge. Tom DiMaggio runs the business, Joe plays host, and the monthly profits are something to see. I learn from my friend John Carmichael that DiMaggio does handsomely by his brothers. To Tom he has presented a sleek new automobile best described as a yacht on wheels, and to young brother Dominic he gave outright a car that he won as an award last summer.

Developing a Personality.

DiMaggio is developing a personality, too. Baseball reporters tabbed him as a guy absolutely without color when he joined the Yankees in spring training in 1936. It was a feat to interview him and after DiMaggio's few unintelligible grunts the usual procedure was to give up.

But DiMaggio is coming around. Last season he began to act the part of a big baseball figure. He began to lend himself to stories, put on shows for the photographers and altogether blossomed as fair "copy." Within this week he will be in the East to be honored as "the player of the year" at the annual ceremonies of the New York and Philadelphia Baseball Writers Associations.

He was the fourth leading hitter in the league last season with his .346 average, in case you have forgotton, and until a month before the season closed was giving Charley Gehringer a fearful battle for the batting lead. "Then, dammit, I started swinging for home runs and you know what that does to a guy's batting average," DiMaggio says.

He did whack out 46 home runs and ranked second place in the league with his 167 runs driven in, but next year, says DiMaggio, "I'm just gonna stand up there and take my cut and let the hits fall where they may. I want to lead this league in hitting pretty soon, now."

Batting Prowess Doubted.

At various stages of his first season in the majors, DiMaggio's batting prowess was doubted by certain big league managers. The early success of Connie Mack's pitchers in stopping DiMaggio gave rise to the belief that the venerable Mack "knew something." Rogers Hornsby always did believe that DiMaggio could be pitched to. But last year, all opinions that DiMaggio had a weakness were hastily revised.

At one time, Buck Newsom broadcast that he knew DiMaggio's weakness. "I'll stop him the first time I pitch against him," boasted Newsom. "He's got a weakness and I know it."

Newsom was right. DiMaggio had a weakness. It was proved one day at Yankee Stadium where Newsom was pitching against the Yanks. He showed up DiMaggio's weakness for 45,000 fans to see. It was a weakness for two-base hits. DiMaggio made three of 'em against Newsom that day.

Gelding Wins As Fraidy Cat Runs Fourth

By the Associated Press.

Hialeah Park, Fla., Jan. 19. Mrs. G. H. Emick's Rollin Home, probably the most improved horse in training, ran off with the featured grade "A" handicap that headed the program here today. The 5-year-old High Time gelding scored by three lengths, running the 6 furlongs in 1:10.2-5, thus equalling the fastest time at the meeting. DeWitt Page's Go Home was second, another three lengths before Mrs. Emil Denemark's War Minstrel.

H. P. Headley's Fraidy Cat, slight choice over the winner, tired trying to catch Rollin Home and finished fourth in the six horse field. Rollin Home paid $6.10.

Rollin Home made his first start of the winter at Tropical Park. Entered for $1,500, he galloped home, then repeated while running for $2,500. Then the speedy chestnut finished second to Clocks in the Hialeah Inaugural Handicap.

The Emick representative led from end to end today, never being menaced. Ralph Eccard shot the gelding into a daylight lead and Rollin Home did just that—he "rolled home" as if pounds the best. Go Home broke well, dropped back temporarily, then came on again and easily held off War Minstrel, which broke slowly in a poor start. Vitelio was eliminated at the break.

Kenty Miss, a filly that made up a world of ground in the recent race won by Roidef, had more early speed today and reversed the decision over that colt in the three furlong opener. The pair battled it out all the way, well in advance of the other 12 youngsters, with Kenty Miss gamely clinging to a half length lead to the wire. She returned $9.40 Roidef, the favorite, took second money by three lengths from Hello Stranger.

The veteran jockey Tommy May was unseated by Travel not long after the start. The colt appeared to be buck jumping and the rider could not stay aboard the green youngster. May was not injured.

Maiden 3-year-olds met in the one mile second race. Grandever, a highly fancied favorite with a good race to run back to, easily graduated under Irving Anderson, paying $4.60. Blond Spook, almost neglected in the wagering, was almost as easily second. He paid 15 to 1 for place. Bit by Bit earned the show. Grandever ran over My Wo in plenty of time, opened up a long lead and won unextended, finishing the eight furlongs in 1:39 4-5.

A blanket finish saw the 11-to-1 shot Putzen score in the mile and a furlong of the third contest. Sun Way, Stone Martin and Mine Boy followed as named, closely bunched.

KENTY MISS, breaking forwardly, secured clear passage and running straight along the inner rail, finished gamely and wore ROIDEF down in the final drive. ROIDEF, quickest to find his stride, drew clear while bearing out in the first furlong, then bore in when Sarno slapped him approaching the furlong pole, but didn't trouble the winner. HELLO STRANGER moved up swiftly in the early stages, and was going strongly at the end. TRAVEL AGENT, very green, lost rider after stumbling at the break.

GRANDEVER broke alertly, went close up in tight quarters on the inside until midway around the turn, took command with a rush when taken to the outside to win as his rider pleased. BLOND SPOOK, on the outside and prominent all the way, finished gamely and was best of the others. BIT BY BIT, slow to find his stride, gradually bettered his position in the last three furlongs, but could not reach the leaders.

SUN WAY, rated off the pace until well straightened into the stretch, finished gamely to punishment and would have won in a few more strides. STONE MARTIN broke well, but was taken back after entering the backstretch, moved up with good courage when placed to pressure, made a bold effort, but was caught in tight quarters right at the end.

JOYRIDE, displaying good speed, went forwardly from the start, saved considerable ground entering the stretch, drew out with a rush, but then faltered through the stretch and was hard urged to maintain his advantage. BLACK RIVER, well up all the way, responded gamely to punishment, gained steadily through the stretch, wore GENE WAGERS down in the last strides. ROLLIN' HOME took command with a rush, set a rapid early pace and drew out into a long lead the first half mile and held sway the remainder of the trip. GO HOME, always well up, came slightly wide entering the stretch, but responded to punishment and finished gamely. WAR MINSTREL, slow to get going, gained rapidly after entering the stretch and wore FRAIDY CAT down in the last strides.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,200. Grade B Handicap. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good for all but Wise Mentor from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:32. Off 4:34. ORIENTALIST, well placed in the early stages, swung around the leaders entering the stretch, closed with determination under a strong ride and wore KINGSBURY down in the last strides. KINGSBURY, prominent all the way, shook off KNOWING through the stretch, but then was unable to stave off the winner's bid. KNOWING began fast, displayed high speed while saving ground, but faltered when challenged.

MOON SWEEP, going forwardly under light restraint until well around the lower turn, moved up determinedly when called upon, shook off the leaders to win as his rider pleased. A. O'CONNELL, slow to get going, began to better his position on the extreme outside after leaving the backstretch, closed gamely to punishment and wore EXHORT down. The latter displayed good speed and went in close attendance of the pace all the way, assumed command entering the stretch, but faltered in the stretch run.

STOCKS, never far from the leader, made a courageous effort, but could not overtake the winner. CONRAD MANN, outrun early, closed a big gap in the last half mile and finished going strong.

At The Post...

Dear Al: Selections at Hialeah Park.

You can't keep a good man down. After being blanked yesterday, we came back today with several winners, including that Joyride at $21. But let's lock up the back-slapping department and try to dig up some news items. J. Simon Healy, New York trainer, has severed connections with the Paragon Stable, it was announced today. The Paragon Stable, by the way, is the racing name of Israel Silberman and Samuel Lewin, of New York. Healy saddled the first juvenile winners of the year

D. C. and New York Boxing Commissions Near Working Agreement

In This Corner

By Jack Cuddy.

New York, Jan. 19.—Tommy and Jim fight Friday night at Madison Square Garden. And I hate to see either of them beaten because both are such grand, wholesome guys.

The other night I was asked to make my pick, and I just had to select Tommy Farr as the winner. I had to pick the Welshman to beat Jim Braddock largely because of the difference in their ages. Braddock is 32 years old, while the invader is only approaching 24. There's more than eight years' difference there—when the years really count. After all, there is no substitute for youth in the fight game.

* * * *

But I am not pulling for Farr, any more than I'm pulling for former Champion Braddock. I don't care who wins. But I dislike seeing either beaten, because both are such pals of mine. And I know how important it is for each to win.

* * * *

* * * *

He will retire after giving pugilism one of its most interesting and amazing chapters—the story of a fighter who was so washed up that he was co-operating with the relief agencies by working as a longshoreman to provide bread and butter for his family. The story of a down-and-outer who returned to the ring to serve as a punching bag for a promising heavyweight, named Corn Griffin. But who refused to be a punching bag and marched over men who were supposed to beat him until he finally wore the crown.

* * * *

The thing that I liked best about Braddock was this: Even after he won the heavyweight title with his stunning victory over madcap Maxie Baer in June, 1935, he was still the same guy. While he was champion, he was worshipped by the public, although he had the misfortune of holding the title under a dark cloud. That cloud was young Joe Louis, who took the title from Jersey James with an eighth round knockout in Chicago last June. Braddock also had the misfortune of making matches to defend his title with veteran Max Schmeling, after Herr Maxie knocked out Louis in June, 1936.

* * * *

Braddock did not go through with that scheduled title defense against Schmeling in New York, because he had made virtually nothing with the title. And he knew that the boycott in New York against Schmeling would whittle the gate down to virtually nothing. He risked and lost his title against Louis, instead, because he figured he would get enough money out of that meeting with the Brown Bomber to assure financial security for himself and family. And that Chicago fight did that very thing—although he was knocked out.

* * * *

Never can I forget that night in Chicago when Braddock came out of his corner to fight with Louis. Braddock was tense that night. He showed his tensity the second the opening gong sounded, and he stepped out, blowing through dilated nostrils like an excited horse. He was tense but unafraid. He showed his fearlessness in that first round when he lashed out and floored the mighty Louis. Then he succumbed to his tensity. He became wild, swinging in all directions and failing to knock out the bewildered Louis.

* * * *

Farr, in many respects is like Braddock—although younger. He, too, came up the hard way. He, too, is admired because of his wholesomeness and because he did not march up stage after making that grand showing against Champion Louis last August. Farr today is the same Welsh coal miner who arrived to train for Louis. He was confident then of his own abilities. He's still confident, despite the decision that went to the Bomber. In his heart he believes he beat Louis in August, and he says, "I know I'll beat him if we ever meet again."

* * * *

Both are making comebacks after being beaten by Louis. The winner, Friday night, will try to march on to the throne room by beating Maxie Baer on March 11. And it seems almost a certainty that the chap who beats Baer in March will battle for the title again in September against Louis or Schmeling—whoever holds the crown at that time.

Local Body May Assent This Week

Empire State Now Has Its Own Rules; Pact Far-Reaching.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

A working agreement between the New York State and District of Columbia boxing commissions will be consummated this week, The Post learned last night. Only the local body's assent is needed to make the articles effective immediately.

Already affiliated with the National Boxing Association, which embraces 37 States, the Washington commission will be invested with ironclad national authority as soon as the agreement is signed. New York remains beyond the pale of the N. B. A., enforcing its own regulations and recognizing its own champions.

The Empire State group often has been at loggerheads with the N. B. A. in the past, and the two never have been able, or willing, to co-operate. This worked a hardship on the District commission, which was powerless to enforce penalties against fighters out of New York. Boxers suspended here automatically were suspended in States affiliated with N. B. A., but were free to continue fighting in New York. And, as most of the talent appearing on local cards is imported from there, certain fighters had little qualms about breaking rules of the Washington body.

Most of them, as a matter of fact, merely fought around New York until their suspension had expired, and returned to fight in another local show. While this did not necessarily weaken the power or detract from the affluence of the District Commission, it had a peculiar effect on mittmen, some of whom figured that infraction of local rules could not be successfully punished. This was particularly true in those rare instances where fighters decided to take a "run-out" powder on local matchmakers.

Under terms of the agreement, fighters suspended here also will be barred in New York until the ban is lifted, and vice versa. They also will be required to fulfill any obligations due either commission before being granted permission to fight in territory under the other's jurisdiction.

The commission members, Maj. Ernest W. Brown, Claude Owen and Paul Haworth, will pass on the matter this week, and it is felt that they will sign the agreement.

Also before the commission this week is the matter of a solution to stop the flow of blood from cuts. Monsell's solution, used almost exclusively elsewhere, is barred locally because of its after effects, although it has been found to be the most effective. The type under consideration and which will be tested thoroughly before a decision is made is called "Fere de Lance."

Rubin Is Signed For Burroughs Bout.

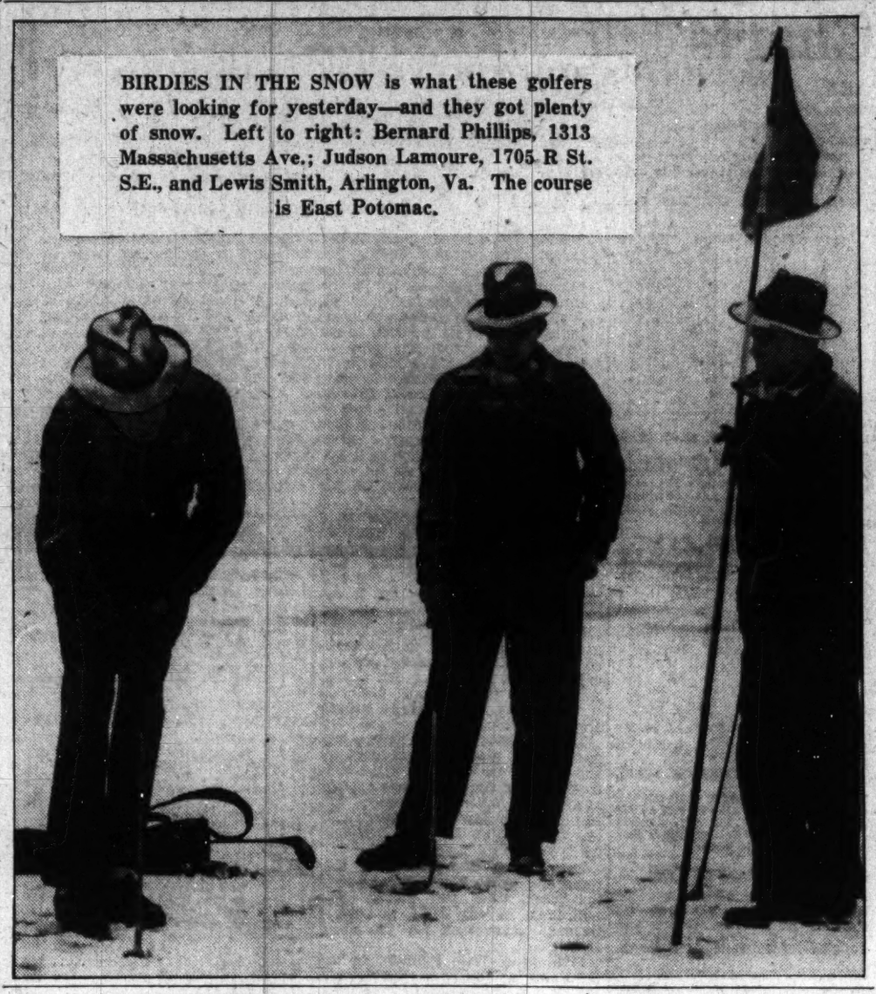
A pair of middleweights, Harry Rubin and Battling Burroughs, last night were added to the boxing program scheduled Monday night at Turner's Arena. They will go eight rounds.

Their bout supports that between Tony Dupre and Al Reid which, in turn, headlines an all-star card.

Burroughs is Jimmy Erwin's protege and has been earmarked as a "comer," despite a few recent adverse decisions. He dropped a close verdict to Johnny Lucas a few weeks back at the arena, and was outpointed by Ben Brown a few weeks before that in Atlanta. He is, nevertheless, a promising ringman as well as a pleasing performer.

Rubin has been campaigning long enough to be called a veteran. He is far from a sensation, but rugged and clever enough to give Burroughs a workout. The transplanted Mississippian, however, will enter the ring an odds-on favorite, because of his potent punch and boring-in style of fighting.

The winner of this match probably will get a shot at George Abrams. Ivan Nedomatsky is expected to battle the winner of that bout, according to plans now on the griddle. Who the winner of that match will meet is something the matchmaker can't quite decide at this time.



BIRDIES IN THE SNOW is what these golfers were looking for yesterday—and they got plenty of snow. Left to right: Bernard Phillips, 1313 Massachusetts Ave.; Judson Lamoure, 1705 R St. S.E., and Lewis Smith, Arlington, Va. The course is East Potomac.

Cosgrove Carries Stymie Fight To Maryland State Golf Body

Tweedy in Line for President of Association; Open, Women's Events Slated Here.

James A. Cosgrove, District of Columbia Golf Association prexy, will carry his torch against the stymie to the Maryland State meeting tomorrow night in Baltimore, where he will attempt to induce the member clubs to abolish the stymie in all State tournaments.

Unsuccessful at the Middle Atlantic meeting last week, Cosgrove is determined to carry the fight to the State and District groups before he will admit defeat in his campaign to show the way to the U. S. G. A., and have this section play minus the stymie.

John V. D. Tweedy, choice of the nominating committee for the president's chair, is expected to succeed the late Basil Wagner. Two District golfers are also in line for posts on the executive committee, Albert E. Steinem, Woodmont, as general counsel, and Martin R. West, Columbia, as vice president in charge of the Washington District. Steinem is serving in the counsel's position at present.

Dates and sites for all the tourneys will be released at the meeting, with the men's and junior play slated for a Baltimore course, and the women's tournament and the open carded for the Washington district.

The association also is expected to announce a varied schedule of bimonthly events, with the combination pro-amateur and amateur handicap events expected to be added to the card. The handicap tourneys were not a success last year and the committee promised a new and different schedule.

The close 10-to-6 margin by which Cosgrove's elimination plan was defeated in the M. A. meeting is a cue that another lengthy fight against the stymie may take place tomorrow night. State officials, however, are expected to string along with the parent body and play the stymie for at least another year. Should he lose tomorrow, Cosgrove will have only the D. C. meeting in which to put over his campaign. M. W. W.

Dodger Post To MacPhail

deals, as well as to determine policies and discuss training camp details.

"Grimes will have the fullest authority on the field and all the support I can give him in organizing a winning club," said MacPhail. "It's always easy to second guess a manager. I'll consult Grimes on any moves we make."

Some observers saw significance in the fact that one of MacPhail's first moves was to close negotiations for a working agreement with the Nashville club of the Southern Association. Nashville is managed by Charley Dressen, who was installed as Cincinnati's pilot in 1934 by MacRhail. The Reds led Dressen go shortly before the end of the 1937 season. The thought developed that if Grimes does not handle the Dodgers to MacPhail's satisfaction this year, Dressen my be in line.

MacPhail sidestepped the topic of night baseball for Brooklyn by saying: "In the first place, we have more important things to consider. Secondly, the Brooklyn situation differs from that in Cincinnati. It's a bigger town and the progress we hope to achieve may not depend on innovations. First we want to develop a better ball club. Night baseball was a success in Cincinnati. It might be a success in Brooklyn, too, but we will have to table that subject for the time being."

Powell B. C. Wins.

Hitting the Headpin

Clark Griffith, Bucky Harris and Joe Cronin will exhibit their respective bowling wares as an added attraction to the President's paralysis fund bowling match Sunday night at Convention Hall, with the owner of the Nats inaugurating the program by rolling the first ball down the alleys.

Harris and Cronin, rival managers of the Nats and Red Sox, will then open the bowling with a singles duel for one game. Harris, who was an ardent bowler when he first came to Washington, will probably be a slight favorite over Cronin, as the latter's winter sports have been mainly confined to the links.

The all-star gathering of duckpin artists will include the ranking players of the Nation, garnered from the District, Maryland and Virginia.

Mrs. Helen Randlett, Richmond, and Miss Naomi Zimmerman, Baltimore, the latter the fifth ranking pinwoman in 1937, will open the program, that will extend until the small hours of the morning, with a five-game singles set at 8 p. m.

A rivalry between the past and present District league leaders will follow with Joe Freschi, present high-average man, and Bill Krauss, attempting to regain his title of last year, meeting in another five-game encounter.

Ida Simmons, Norfolk's pride, the top woman bowler of the country will pair with Joe Harrison, half of the Dixie Doubles championship team against Astor Clarke, who needs no introduction, and Mrs. Randlett.

Clarke will be featured in the windup against Joe Pacini, winner of two sweepstakes this year, while the women's singles duel will be between those old rivals, Ida Simmons and Lorrane Gulli, who was dethroned by Miss Simmons as national champion.

The entire card will not have a dull moment with any world's mark likely to be endangered by the promising array of pin-spillers. Reserved seats and general admission will go on sale before the matches.

American Security & Trust No. 1 rolled a new season's record for the Bankers' League last night at Arcadia, with a 1,755 score for the three games. They also rolled high team game for the night with 621.

Jim Breun, of W. B. Hibbs, hit the pins for high individual game of 155, while San Fellipo had high set with 378. The latter rolls for National Bank of Washington.

The third-place Bregman's Wildcats bowling team moved within a game of first place in the Recreation League by handing the pace-setting University Shop a 2-1 setback last night at Recreation Alleys. John Chaney's 419 and Abe Beaver's 368 led the winning charge, with Hargett's 372 and Bradt's 360 were tops for the losers.

Terry's Home Appliance Co., paced by Dave Williams' 400, deadlocked the University Shop for the lead by taking the odd skirmish from Herzog's, despite Astor Clarke's 388 and Di Misa's 366.

Marvins Credit Co., led by Lou Pantos' second straight 400 set in the loop, a brilliant 412, swept its set from Cooke Press, the Marvins boys chalking up a new season record with a 663 game.

Blaydes Contracting Co., aided by El Geib's 397, whitewashed the Marlboro Hotel, while Blankens Restaurants, paced by Harry Wolfe's 387, took a 2-1 decision from Allied Roofing.

Card Quintet Plays Tonight

C. U. Travels to Meet Baltimore U. Team.

Catholic University's victory starved basketball team will seek its second victory of the season tonight when it journeys to Baltimore to meet Baltimore University's five.

The Cardinals haven't won a game since they defeated Maryland State Teachers College in the schedule opener. They have dropped seven games in a row.

Coach Fod Cotton is planning a shift in his line-up in an effort to get more height on the floor. Nick Sarelas, substitute guard, will start in place of John McKenna and Frank Krawczel will replace Vic Miller at the other guard post.

Baltimore, having a mediocre season, misses the services of "Shorty" Probst, 6-4 center, who led last year's team to 19 wins in 21 games. One of the losses was inflicted by C. U.

Baltimore bowed to George Washington University's five here earlier in the season.

Woman Billiard Star 'Runs' Men Rivals to Distraction

Ruth McGinnis Shames Arcadia Experts in 3-Day Stand.

By Walter Haight.

I understand that the better billiard players around the Arcadia Parlors still knock their knees together every time the name of Ruth McGinnis is mentioned. Ruth, a Honesdale, Pa., girl breezed into the Arcadia last week for a three-night stand and left with the chalked and powdered scalps of six of the Fourteenth and Park road's leading male stars dangling from her belt.

Manager Ray Miller tells me that he is thinking about borrowing a black bowling ball from Ralph Fraser, manager of the adjacent alleys, and painting an "eight" on it, so there will be plenty of room for all the boys behind it.

Ruth learned to play pocket billiards when she was 9 years old in her father's establishment. Since, she was won the world's professional title so definitely that she cannot find opposition among her own sex. Babe Didrickson challenged once but, after taking a 500-110 drubbing, refused to even consider a tour with Ruth.

The Pennsylvania girl stopped here for one of a long series of exhibitions that will take her South and then West where she hopes to make a short subject for the movies.

Ruth goes through a rack of billiard balls as quickly and as thoroughly as some of her more domestic sisters would shell a pound of peas. At the Arcadia she had two runs in the thirties while her male opponents stood shifting their weight from one leg to the other and tried to be nonchalant about it all. Ruth, like a farm hand, is all business at the table. While a match is in progress, she powders her hands but not her nose.

Now hold your hats fellows, I believe I have excuse enough to be off again.

Around Fourteenth street and Florida avenue we used to call it "pool" in those days, but I understand that present reference to pocket billiards as "pool" or a billiard parlor as a "poolroom" is about as risky as walking up to a table tennis star and congratulating him on his "ping pong playing" or calling up the gun club and asking for the skeet results.

My first long pants suit made me eligible for admittance to Doc's Elite Poolroom at the corner and I was quick to take full advantage.

Doc frowned as I strutted into the place officially for the first time. He looked down at my long pants and muttered something to himself about "I must be getting old." I climbed into one of the high cane chairs and watched while Fats Wheatley, one of the older boys, described a bank into the side pocket with the end of his cue and then I fairly gaped as the balls collided and the yellow-banded nine ball thumped into the pocket.

Prior to that time, a pool cue to me represented only an ideal defensive weapon in our occasional skirmishes with the Cow Town gang.

The foremost ambition of every boy around Fourteenth street and Florida avenue was not to be President: it was to be a pool "shark," that rare species of pool player who is so good that he defeats all comers and earns his living that way. Almost every poolroom, at the time, had its shark. He was the fellow who always walked up to the fat stranger, asking, "How about a little game?" or "How many points will you spot me?"

Most sharks had larceny in their blood and would stage a few "come-on" games, mis-cueing and otherwise dubbing until their "meat," as they referred to "suckers" in those days, had confidence enough to wager.

RUTH McGINNIS.

There were a couple of sharks around Fourteenth and U streets who were marked men. Publicity was bad for these sharks and, at times, they were forced to visit other towns to keep from starving. But, somehow, they invariably reappeared at the old corner.

The war, and the period that immediately followed, changed Washington. The city was crowded with former service men, the majority having some part of the $60 bonus. Any portion of a service uniform on a man entering a poolroom was a signal for the sharks to get in action.

Into the poolroom one afternoon came two fellows, wearing muddy shoes, overseas caps, tan shirts and civilian pants. A table was open and they took down cues and tapped for the manager to take the rack off the balls.

"Just a couple of country boys," the sharks said to themselves and it was not long before there were four players at the table.

We regulars suppressed our smiles and waited for the sharks to make the kill. The first few games were sorry exhibitions. Finally the sharks "got action," but they were forced to give their opponents a five-ball handicap in a 25-point game.

The real identity of the two country-looking strangers was never revealed, but it is a fact that they played our two sharks until closing time, midnight, and won all the cash the sharks could raise. Not only that, but they rubbed it in by playing the final game, spotting the then frantic sharks "25 or no count" which means that the sharks could count every ball they made, but their opponents must run 25 balls or start over.

I understand that the "country former service men" stayed here two weeks, working their way down Fourteenth street, up Ninth street and along H street, leaving in their wake the disillusioned and penniless sharks of a hundred poolrooms.

Farm Credit Wins.

Alexandria, Va., Jan. 19.—Lee-Jackson High School's cagers suffered their second setback in eight starts here this afternoon, bowing to the strong Farm Credit Bureau five, by a score of 23-16.

Howard Five Wins, 51-34

Fighting the 1937 champs of the Colored Intercollegiate Conference to a standstill in the first half, and drawing away in the second, the Bisons of Howard University last night defeated the A. and T. College, Greensboro, N. C., on the university court, 51-34, before a capacity crowd.

Chemical Bank Head Predicts New Upswing

Incessant Political Attack on Business, He Says, Has Slowed Industry.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 19.—Percy H. Johnston, chairman of the Chemical Bank & Trust Co., in his annual report to stockholders today, predicted a recuperation of industry from its current recession.

Although, he said, "the future is fraught with uncertainty" and "the incessant political attack on business and businessmen has slowed down the general wheels of industry," he expressed the opinion "that in the end sound reason and judgment will prevail and that the Nation again will go forward; that industry, the real lifeblood of the Nation, will recuperate and be less molested and harassed."

"To attack business because it is big is sheer nonsense," he continued. "Our observation, over a long period of time, has been that big business has consistently lowered the price to the consumer, bettered working conditions, shortened hours, raised wages and has been the backbone in the support of city, State and national governments.

Pay Envelopes Vital.

"The biggest job in this Nation is the filling of pay envelopes. We believe in the old-fashioned principle that businessmen can do this better than politicians and theorists whose background is devoid of any practical business experience."

Johnston's report showed $1,243,093.95 added to the bank's undivided profit account, after payment of $3,600,000 in regular dividends, and provision for losses, reserves and pensions. Deposits for the year averaged $14,698,000 less than 1936.

Guaranty Criticism.

New York, Jan. 19 (AP).—Businessmen cannot be induced to borrow money from banks at current low interest rates unless they have "confidence in the future and a reasonable expectation of profit," William C. Potter, chairman, and W. Palen Conway, president, of the Guaranty Trust Co., told stockholders at their annual meeting today.

Whether banks generally will be able to increase their commercial loans, the executives said, will depend upon business conditions and business requirements. Earnings of the Guaranty for 1937 were $13,660,810, against $13,409,158 in 1936.

At the annual meting of Irving Trust Co. stockholders, Harry E. Ward, president, and Lewis E. Pierson, chairman, criticized the Federal Government fiscal policies directed toward the control of interest rates.

U. S. Treasury Receipts.

The position of the Treasury on January 17:

Receipts for the fiscal year (since July 1), $3,366,002,219.51; expenditures, $4,174,684,062.70, including $1,107,361,226.01 of emergency expenditures; excess of expenditures, $808,681,843.19; gross debt, $37,406,160,151.13, an increase of $5,894,335.97 above the previous day; gold assets, $12,755,280,791.36, including $1,222,965,698.06 of inactive gold.

Gen. Motors to Build Small Diesel Engines

Detroit, Jan. 19 (AP).—General Motors Corporation announced today the inauguration of mass production of small, lightweight, two-cycle Diesel engines. The new motors will range from 22 horsepower upward. Heretofore General Motors Diesel production has been confined to large two-cycle engines of from 600 to 1,200 horsepower.

Boston Wool Market.

Boston, Jan. 19 (AP) (U. S. Dept. of Agriculture).—Sentiment in the Boston wool market was showing a little improvement today. Reports from London indicated a better opening tone on Tuesday than had been anticipated by members of the Boston trade. Trading in Boston continued very light, with prices mostly near the low side of nominal ranges quoted last week. Asking prices were beginning to show more steadiness as a result of the favorable London opening.

Wheat Declines As Big World Surplus Looms

Reports That It Will Reach ½ Billion Bushels Cuts Prices 2c Maximum.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Jan. 19.—Jolted by sensational suggestions of a billion-bushel world wheat surplus ahead, wheat prices fell 2 cents here late today, but then recovered in part.

The suggestions, which came in a report by an international wheat committee, saying normal yields from present acreage would lead to enormous supplies, were ridiculed as visionary by leading crop specialists in Chicago. B. W. Snow, former United States Secretary of Agriculture, characterized the report as ridiculous long-range weather forecasting the world over for a year or two years in advance.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were 1 cent to 1¼ cents under yesterday's finish, May, 95¼@⅜; July, 89¾@⅞; corn, ⅜@⅝ down; May, 60½@¼; July, 60⅝; oats, ⅛@¼ off; rye showing ⅞@1¼ setback, and provisions unchanged to 20 cents lower.

New York, Jan. 19 (AP).—In hibernation for 18 months, Texas Pacific Land Trust again came to life today on the stock tape with a sale of one $100 par certificate at $900. Giving effect to dividends paid during the period, the transaction involved a net decline of $70 from the previous sale, recorded in the week of July 19, 1936.

Electric Output Dips 6.6% Under Year Ago

New York, Jan. 19 (AP).—Production of electricity in the United States for the week ended January 15 totaled 2,115,134,000 kilowatt hours, a drop of 1.1 per cent from $2,139,582,000 in the preceding week and a decline of 6.6 per cent from 2,264,125,000 in the comparable week last year, the Edison Electric Institute reported today.

Rail and Industrial Shares Lead Downturn in Market

Late Recovery Cuts Losses in Some Groups But Declines Predominate at Close; Rail Bonds Weak.

By Frederick Gardner,
Associated Press Financial Writer.

New York, Jan. 19.—Backtracking after the recent new year upturn, the stock market yielded today under moderate offerings for losses of 1 to 3 points or so in many rails and industrials. A few mining and utility issues broke away from the main retreat and made minor gains. A late recovery cut losses in rails, motors, steels, chemicals and other groups.

But declines predominated at the finish and the Associated Press average price of 60 stocks was lower for the third consecutive session, ending off .6 of a point at 46. Transactions increased to 998,851 shares from 779,060 in the previous session.

Again the chief concern of most market analysts were prospects for continuation of the January business pickup and what Federal policies would evolve from White House conferences with industrialists and Congressional hearings on taxes and unemployment. The day's news, brokers noted, shed little light on these matters.

Although talk of increased Government spending for armament and relief persisted in brokerage circles, the focus of the moment was on deflationary trends in commodity prices, agitation for lower quotations on steel and manufactured goods and a slippery bond market. Wheat at Chicago lost 1 to 1½ cents a bushel and corn was down ⅜ to ⅝ at the finish. Cotton, contrary to the direction of most speculative staples, rallied 25 to 30 cents a bale.

Erie in Forefront.

Selling in rail stocks, pivots on the market's retreat, echoed wide breaks in a number of carrier bonds. The Erie reorganization move, together with expectation of poor December earning reports, kept rail problems before Wall Street and excited interest in the chances of an early I. C. C. decision on the application for higher freight rates.

Traders seemed to think, however, cost deflation might help utilities and gold mining shares. Alaska Juneau, McIntyre Porcupine, Dome, Consolidated Edison, American Water Works and Electric Power & Light closed fractionally to more than a point ahead. Some utility students professed to get comfort from developments in the controversy over TVA purchases of private power properties. Latest power production figures were off 6.6 per cent from the comparable 1937 total.

Some of the larger losses at the close were recorded for Crucible Steel, Norfolk & Western, Union Pacific, Johns Manville, Eastman Kodak, Chesapeake & Ohio, International Harvester, Sears Roebuck, Allied Chemical, duPont, American Can, Allis Chalmers, National Steel and Atlantic Coast Line. U. S. Gypsum, 70.2, was among the exceptions to the main trend.

Formation of the Chautemps government in France was influential in rallying the franc to 3.36 cents, up .02 of a cent. Otherwise foreign currencies held to a straight course.

Securities of a half dozen prominent railroads continued to exert depressing influences on the bond market today and with scattered exceptions quoted values melted away fractions to 2 or more points.

Contrary to the previous day, when there was plenty of unfavorable news from the carrier front, including the Erie reorganization decision, the market was comparatively free of specific developments of an adverse nature. But bond market circles said overnight offerings found few takers except at substantial concessions and this condition prevailed until late in the session when extreme losses were reduced and in some instances converted into gains.

In this group were Erie general lien 4s, refunding 5s, Nickel Plate 4½s, Baltimore & Ohio refunding 5s and convertible 5s, all of which ended ¼ to more than 2 points above water.

Contrasting performers were Erie general 6s, off 7 at 54; Southern Pacific 4½s of 1969, off 3 at 53⅛; Southern Railway general 6s, off 3 at 50; Baltimore & Ohio 4s of 1948, off 2 at 60; Chesapeake & Ohio 4½s, off 2 at 118; Nickel Plate 6s, off 4 at 68¼; New York Central 5s, off 3¼ at 63¼; Alleghany stamped 5s, off 3 at 29; Illinoise Central 4¼s, off 3½ at 29, and Great Northern 4s, off 2 at 99½. There were a few wider losers.

The industrial and utility sections were disturbed, but losses in most cases were small and there were a few gainers.

United States Government bonds maintained an even keel, with the majority of active issues unchanged to 1-32 of a point lower. Treasury 3s of 1948 and Federal Farm Mortgage 3¼s moved higher.

Copper 10½ Cents; 2d Cut in 2 Days

New York, Jan. 19 (AP).—American Smelting & Refining Co. announced today the second cut in the domestic smelter price of copper in the past two days. The new price is 10½ cents a pound, compared with 10¾ cents previously. The latter price is now back to the level prevailing January 7 and wipes out three small advances.

Leading producers continued to quote the metal at 11 cents, as they have for some months past. The low for 1937-38 was 10 cents reached December 2 and the high 17 cents on March 31.

Steel Output Continues Rise To 30 Per Cent

But Outlook for Future Business Is Still in Doubt.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 19.—Steel ingot production this week has risen to 30 per cent of capacity, compared with 28 per cent last week, but the outlook for future business is still obscure, Iron Age said today in its weekly review of the steel industry.

"The flow of business is so irregular that no definite upward trend is yet indicated," the publication said. "Operations of mills and furnaces at many plants are intermittent. Facilities are shut down one week to await an accumulation of orders and then started up another week to process these orders."

Regarding this week's production rise, it was pointed out that the improvement was not uniform as to districts. The sharpest gain was in the Wheeling-Weirton area, where the rate jumped 10 points to 56 per cent of capacity. Pittsburgh remained unchanged at 24 per cent. Elsewhere there were losses, or no change in operations. The Youngstown district operating rate was down 1 point to 27 per cent, the South 3 points lower at 46 per cent, and the southern Ohio district off 2 points to 29 per cent.

Hand-to-Mouth Buying.

Hand-to-mouth buying is the policy of most steel users, it was said. Regarding formal negotiations on a new U. S. steel corporation wage contract which are slated to begin February 7, the organ said:

"The situation with respect to wages and prices is fraught with more than the usual complexities. It is difficult to see, for example, how forward policies on wages and prices can be established until business has some clearer indication of the Government's intention on taxes, competition with private enterprise and of its future attitude toward employers of labor.

"Steel companies are showing no disposition to make concessions on prices." Scrap prices marked time this week, the Iron Age composite price index holding at $14 a ton for the third week.

Dr. G. W. Field, Pioneer in Soil Erosion, Is Dead

Founder of Sharon Farm, Known Throughout World, Was 74.

Dr. George Wilton Field, a pioneer in soil erosion work and an international authority on the biological uses of water, died last night. He was 74 and had been a patient at Washington Sanitarium for the past eight years. Before this he had made his home with a daughter, Mrs. Ernst Spink, 220 Chestnut avenue, Takoma Park, Md.

As collaborator for the United States Biological Survey, Dr. Field had contributed data on the biological uses of water for the Government publication, "Little Waters—a Study of Headwater Streams and Their Use and Relation to the Land." This publication represents a study of the national resources based on facts of 40 scientists in all branches of learning.

Set Up Sharon Farm.

Dr. Field established the Sharon Experimental Biological Farm, which became known throughout the world. It was at Sharon, which still flourishes, that most of the principles employed by the Government in water conservation and flood control were developed.

Dr. Field went to Sharon, Mass., site of the farm, about 36 years ago, and at first many of the natives thought him an eccentric who stood and worked in the rain. But he poineered in the study of replenishing impoverished earth—and many results of his studies are used today in the Nation's war on droughts and dust storms.

Great interest was taken in Dr. Field's work in its earlier days by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology at Boston. In 1901 Dr. Field became biologist of the Rhode Island State College Experimental Station at Kingston, but he left there to join the faculty of M. I. T.

In 1896, while he was working on cellular biology, he was one of the first to observe hormones and their stimulating effect on animal life. He was a stanch advocate of the establishment of ponds throughout the country for a study of nature's cycle of matter.

He developed a method of plowing under clover to check soil erosion and the loss of soil elements. He also developed a method of checking soil erosion by filling trenches with loose rocks, a method now used in many Western areas of the United States.

In 1919 he left for Brazil, and worked there for three years establishing the Brazilian Fisheries. Dr. Field planned the Boston water supply and did important work in relation to the Charles River Basin.

Went to Europe Often.

For 40 years he went to Europe frequently as a consultant on water problems. As a result of his teachings and theories, most European governments today refuse owners permission to drain water from their property until it performs its biological service in relaton to the land itself.

Only last summer a lake at Andover, Mass., was named Field Lake in honor of the scientist.

A native of Bridgewater, Mass., Dr. Field was a graduate of the Johns Hopkins University, the University of Munich, Germany, and the University of Naples, Italy.

He was a member of Phi Beta Kappa, the Cosmos Club, the Washington Philatelic Society and a former chairman of the Massachusetts fish and game commission. He belonged to the Mount Pleasant Congregational Church.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Mary Belle Field; two other daughters, Mrs. Bernice Balfour, of Sharon, Mass., and Mrs. Richard Morse, of Foxboro, Mass., and two sons, John Bacon Field, of Suburn, N. Y., and Daniel B. Field, of Roxbury, Mass.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow at 2:30 p. m. at Brockton, Mass., followed by burial there.

Notables Inspect Sculptured Models Offered In Competition for Apex Building Adornment

Models submitted by sculptors in the Apex Building sculpture competition evoked a variety of expressions. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt appears to be surprised; Edward Rowan, her guide, quite enthusiastic, and Miss Malvina Scheider, secretary to Mrs. Roosevelt, unimpressed.

What will it be—nudes or bison, rassiers or winged horses, Indians or eagles, deep thinkers or allegorical figures or steamships?

A distinguished preview group, headed by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, yesterday made mental notes on their favorites when the Treasury's painting and sculpture section disclosed 492 models entered by 246 American artists competing for the commission to do two pieces of exterior sculpture for the new Apex Building.

All the entries, representing practically every State, Territory and possession, were in yesterday, and their diversified character assured a tough job for the jury when it meets soon to pick the winner.

Edward Bruce, founder and director of the Government's art department, was host to the private luncheon-exhibition, held at the Federal Warehouse. Surrounding two-score guests were the plaster models, each pair bearing the hope of an unidentified artist eager to receive the $46,500 commission.

The competition was announced six months ago. What was wanted, America's sculptors were told, were two sculptural groups to embellish either side of the Apex Building, facing the Capitol. The structure will house the Federal Trade Commission, but contestants were not obliged to insert the trade motif in their work.

Mrs. Roosevelt did not snub a model. With Edward Rowan, superintendent of the painting and sculpture section, as her guide, she inspected all—massive figures in the classical style, impressionists studies, literal interpretations of traders, recumbent nudes, a Centaur-like creature and his mate, a boy and a girl in modern dress, et cetera.

But the First Lady, if she selected her favorite, did not announce it. Nor did Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, Senators Bulkley and La Follette, Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, Frederic A. Delano, Alvin Hall, director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; Mrs. Robert P. Lamont or any of the other dignitaries present.

The official judging, Rowan announcd, will be by a committee consisting of Paul Manship, Lee Lawrie and Adolph A. Weinman, all internationally known American sculptors, and a representative of the architectural firm of Bennett, Parsons & Frost, which designed the building.

As Secretary Perkins remarked, "There are very few silly entries," and the great majority of the models will receive serious consideration. The jury was selected by the competitors themselves, who sent ballots to the painting and sculpture section.

Who designed what won't be known until after the award is decided upon. This is in keeping with the policy of the painting-sculpture section. The $46,500 the winner will receive covers the whole project—design, stone and carving.

Rowan estimated the models alone represented an outlay of $10,000 in material and transportation, exclusive of the time spent in creating them.

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

London, Jan. 19.—Following the formation of the French cabinet, stock prices steadied, but trading remained restricted. British funds were marked down slightly in anticipation of selling from Paris. Copper issues remained firm despite the reduction in the American price for that metal. Industrials and oils were quiet and transatlantic issues held steady. Brazilian bonds moved up 1 to 2 points, and German and French liens were about unchanged.

Paris.—Price movements were mixed at the close of the bourse with International Securities slightly higher. Suez Canal gained 60 francs and royal dutch was up fractionally. Rentes finished with net gains of 5 to 30 centimes. Bank of France issue was 10 francs down.

Liverpool.—Wheat futures eased off owing to the extremely poor milling demand and lower North American prices. Net losses ranged from ¼d to ⅝d. Cotton futures closed 5 to 6 points lower, following the decline at Bombay. Local buying developed on the more favorable French situation, but traders feared increased Bombay selling.

Judges Dismiss Charge Against D. C. Attorney

Unethical Practice Count Withdrawn for Lack of Evidence.

One of two charges alleging unethical practices against Henry Green, Washington attorney, was withdrawn in Police Court yesterday when three judges, sitting in general term, held insufficient evidence had been introduced.

In the charge which was dismissed, Green was accused of soliciting the case of a Police Court defendant whom he knew to be already represented by another attorney. There was no evidence to uphold the allegation.

Green is accused also of collecting money from a woman traffic violator, representing himself as an officer of the court assigned to collect collateral. This case was being heard when trial was adjourned until this afternoon.

Green is the second local attorney to face unethical practice charges in Police Court within the past month. The case of John P. Mullan is now under consideration. Charges against two bondsmen also have been heard and are awaiting court action.

Citations were results of investigation by a special committee of the District Bar Association.

Facts in two other cases have been presented to the judges.

Last Rites Held For Slain Scribe

New York, Jan. 19 (AP).—Requiem high mass was sung in the Roman Catholic Church of the Guardian Angel today for Edward J. O'Neil, jr., Associated Press war correspondent, fatally wounded on the Teruel battlefront in Spain December 31.

Neil's body arrived today on the liner Berengaria. Sprays of bright spring flowers covered it at the church. Other flowers were banked along the sanctuary rail, so high they obscured figures of the saints. One floral piece was a great round shield of white carnations centered with red flowers forming a big "30," the traditional symbol of the end of a news story.

Neil's widow—the former Helen Nolan, who went down the bay in a cutter to meet her husband's body—was accompanied to the church by Neil's father, Edward J. Neil; the correspondent's brother, Dr. Richard J. Neil, and his sisters, Mrs. Mabel Riordan and Mrs. Dorothy Trainor.

After the mass Neil's body was taken by train to Methuen, Mass., his birthplace, for burial.

D. C. Man Worried As Praying Mantes Overrun His Home

Somewhere in Washington today there is a houseful of Praying Mantes, the long green insects imported to this country to help control insect pests.

A puzzled subscriber called The Post yesterday to learn what could be done about the grotesque relatives of the grasshopper.

His children, he said, gathered an egg-sack before Christmas, and yesterday morning "manteses" were hatched and running wild in the house.

Despite popular beliefs, the Chinese insects are quite harmless and will die for lack of tender little insects or brothers and sisters, to eat.

Tariff Boosts To Cut Mexican Trade With U.S.

Increases From 10 to 200% Effective for Four Months.

By the Associated Press.

Mexico City, Jan. 19.—Sharp reductions in Mexico's purchases from the United States for the next four months were forecast authoritatively today as the Mexican government boosted tariffs 10 to 200 per cent.

Importers were irate when informed by the Treasury Department's customs office that the tariff decree would be retroactive as of December 31. Finance Minister Eduardo Suarez, however, said the rates would not be effective until Friday.

The decree appeared in the official gazette for December 31, released only today. Luxury items were taxed heaviest. The high rates continue until May 1, and then will be scaled down for the remainder of the year.

Suarez explained the decree as one of the measures taken "to strengthen our money in the interior * * * as well as in foreign exchange."

Suarez emphasized that aid Washington gave by promising to continue purchases of silver was intended to encourage commerce between the two nations.

Nothing indicated the decree will discriminate against the United States, but it was pointed out the United States would be the hardest hit because more than 60 per cent of Mexico's purchases for the last three years were made north of the Rio Grande.

Mail Carriers Ask 30-Yr. Retirement

The National Association of Letter Carriers yesterday indorsed a new retirement plan for Government employes that would permit optional retirement after 30 years' service, as hearings were opened before a sub-committee of the Senate Civil Service Committee.

Edward J. Gainor, president of the association, was the only employe spokesman prepared to testify, others stating they needed more time to study a report made Saturday to Congress by the board of actuaries of the civil service retirement system.

Hearings will be resumed after a week or 10 days, Senator Neely (Democrat), of West Virginia, said.

Firm Sues D. C. To Recover Tax

The District's much-litigated business privilege tax was attacked from a new angle yesterday when the firm of Neild & Sauerhoff, 1308 Water street southwest, sued the District to recover taxes paid under the law.

Claiming the tax, the first installment of which was paid under "complete protest," was in effect taxation under duress, the firm, through attorneys Alvin L. Newmyer and David G. Bress, said the payment was "involuntary" and was made after the license enabling the company to do business was threatened with revocation January 4, 1938.

Bob Burns Says—

These movin' picture companies out here have made a science of foolin' people with their fake wind, lightnin', thunder, rain and glycerine tears but it ain't the only place in the world where people are fooled by mechanical sound effects.

One time my Aunt Zella's daughter come to her and says "Mama, I know my fella loves me because whenever he presses me to his bosom I can feel his heart throbbin' violently."

Aunt Zella says "Well, be sure it ain't his dollar watch. Your Paw fooled me with one of them things."

Does South Want Lynch Law Passed?

After the continued filibuster in Congress on the Wagner-Van Nuys bill, the Gallup Poll asked the voters if they indorsed Federal action on lynching. The poll divided the bill into several parts to learn if America is in favor of all the provisions or just part of the bill. The Gallup Poll in Friday's Post also gives you the reaction of the South, the North, the East and the West on the lynch law.

Price Sworn in As Governor of Old Dominion

Throngs Brave Cold to See Executive Take Oath at Richmond.

By Marshall Andrews,
A Staff Correspondent.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 19.—Before a crowd that filled Virginia's Capitol and overflowed onto its steep lawns and shivered and cheered by turns, James Hubert Price today became the State's one hundred and fourteenth Governor.

The oath of office was administered by Chief Justice Preston W. Campbell, of the Supreme Court of Appeals, after a burst of applause which greeted the new governor had subsided. Immediately before, Saxon W. Holt, of Newport News, had taken the oath as lieutenant governor, administered by his brother, Justice Henry W. Holt, of the Supreme Court. Attorney General Abram P. Staples was sworn in before a joint session of the Senate and House of Delegates by Justice Herbert B. Gregory, of the Supreme Court.

In his inaugural address delivered in the hall of the House, away from chill blasts that swept the brightly-decorated portico, Gov. Price told the General Assembly it might be necessary to delay or compromise on some measures recommended by George C. Peery, his predecessor.

He advocated an old-age assistance act, gradual expansion of schools with additional appropriations, reduction in the capitation tax, liberalization of its restrictions on suffrage, redistricting in the General Assembly, an eight-hour day for women in industry, and a separate department for control of mental hospitals.

He recommended commissions to study creation of boards to manage all activities of counties, revision of election laws, a study of crime causes and consolidation of all police functions of the State in a department of safety.

Although Price declared himself in sympathy with "the present trend of Government toward humanitarian ideals," he said he would not "purchase the fruits of these ideals by extravagant or ill-advised liberality."

Part of the 50,000 Virginians who braved cold and threatening snow to see a West Virginian go through the ceremony of becoming State Executive were on hand at the Jefferson Hotel, 2 miles from the Capitol, when he emerged with Gov. Peery and the inaugural committee. Lusty cheers followed the party along the route and up to the Capitol portico and punctuated the new Governor's inaugural address.

With Price to welcome Peery and his committee were Secretary of Agriculture Wallace; Col. Edward Watson, aide of President Roosevelt and his special representative, and Representative John W. Flannagan, jr.

Both parties clambered into automobiles and drove down Franklin street behind six bands and military units in the colorful uniforms of the "Blues" and "Grays" and "Guards" and "Fencibles" of an older day in the Old Dominion.

When Peery left the Executive Mansion at 11 a. m. for his last official act as Governor, a field gun slammed out 19 thunderous salutes. When the procession turned into the Capitol grounds the alarm bell, which has called Richmond to battle against fire and flood and invading armies, sounded 19 notes of welcome. And no sooner had Price uttered the "I do" which made him Governor than the field gun blazed out 19 times again and bathed the hill in rolling blue smoke.

Immediately drums crashed and the blare of brass wound up the curving driveway before the portico where the new Governor stood to review the military of the Commonwealth. With the music came the Stonewall Brigade Band of Staunton. The First Regiment Band followed.

A delegation of Mattaponi Indians, in beaded leather and feathers, came next, one high-spirited young brave dancing ecstatically when the crowd cheered.

After the Indians strode the Alexandria Light Infantry in light blue trousers, gray shell jackets trimmed in blue and light blue forage caps with black leather visors.

Last night, 300 Virginia Democrats held a belated Jackson Day dinner at the Hotel John Marshall and heard Senator Harry Flood Byrd, master of ceremonies, declare Peery "leaves Virginia in the best condition of any State in the Union." John Temple Graves 2d, newspaper columnist and lecturer of Birmingham, Ala., was the principal speaker, His subject was "Andrew Jackson and Another Gentleman."

If your chicken tastes better in the future, part of the credit is due U. S. experts at Beltsville, Md., who strive to breed a superior type of bird like the hen at her nest above.

Shepherd Haynes, chief scientific aide, is shown placing eggs in an automatic incubator where they will remain for seven days. Then the eggs are removed and inspected, infertile eggs being discarded. Each egg bears the number of the hen which laid it, and a careful check is kept from the time it leaves the nest.

Here Haynes is pictured candling eggs after the first seven days of incubation. The fertile eggs are restored to the incubator where they remain until they hatch—about 10 days more. A powerful light in the candler reveals to the examiner whether an embryo has formed. If no embryo shadow appears, out goes the egg.

Dr. Charles W. Knox, senior poultry geneticist, inspects newly hatched chicks preparatory to banding them, and the study of a new generation then begins. A daily record is kept of both the dam and sire until the fourth generation.

Robber Beats and Robs Employer; Augmented Force Continued; Brown Seeks More Police

An augumented police force failed last night to prevent the hammer robbery of one Washington citizen, though, aided by a watchful hotel clerk, detectives were able to claim the solution of a series of "magazine salesmen" burglaries.

George F. Orlowsky, 30, of 631 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, was beaten on the head with a hammer and robbed by a colored man he had employed on a part-time job.

Painfully injured, Orlowsky stumbled into a drug store at Seventh street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest where he told officers the man, identified as a former CCC camp worker, beat him repeatedly with a hammer and robbed him of $6 during an argument over wages for an hour's work on the Orlowsky premises.

Two Youths Seized.

Third Precinct detectives claimed solution of a series of raids on Washington apartments by a pair of alleged burglars who posed as magazine salesmen with the arrest of two colored youths in connection with the assault and robbery last Saturday night of Mrs. Waverly Mayton in her apartment at 1721 Twenty-first street northwest.

Mrs. Mayton was knocked down by one of the pair while the other ran into the apartment and snatched her pocketbook. Both had informed her they were selling magazines. Police said this means of entering apartments and hotel rooms had been used by two burglars in six other instances.

Two men, Joseph F. Gray, 18, of the 1300 block of Twenty-first street northwest, and John W. Tabor, 17, of the 1200 block of Twentieth street northwest, were arraigned in police court yesterday on charges of housebreaking, held for the grand jury and taken to District Jail in default of $5,000 bonds.

Loitered in Corridor.

The were captured early yesterday in a Sixteenth street hotel when an employe found them loitering in a corridor and, becoming suspicious after police had warned hotel and apartment workers to be on the lookout for the magazine burglars, summoned Third Precinct Detectives Jack Dalstrom and John Meshkoff.

John Brown, a janitor in the Mayton apartment house, identified the pair, police said, as the men he and Mrs. Mayton's daughter, Betty, 17, had chased from the building.

Police said one of the prisoners had been given a probationary sentence on a similar charge in Police Court two months ago.

As 105 policemen from the day force returned to snowy beats to stem the tide of crime in the District, Chief of Police Ernest W. Brown declared he needed "at least 200 additional privates" to give the city "minimum adequate protection."

This plea was substantiated by the Washington Criminal Justice Association which stated that the inadequate force was doing excellent work in holding crime down as much as it has, but that additional men were a "necessity."

Brown pointed out that during the last five years, while the District has grown about 150,000 in population, his police force has been increased only 25 men.

Actually the force last year was increased by 25 men, but action by Congress in giving policemen 26 days annual leave instead of the former 15 days meant that 28 additional men were needed to maintain the beats, Brown said.

The Washington Criminal Justice Association, through its executive director, Dr. James A. Nolan, emphasized as much as possible the necessity for an increase in size of the police force from its present 1,391 men.

Dr. Nolan repeated the association's recommendation, in which it was joined by many other civic organizations, for the splitting up of the Second Precinct in the city's most populous area and staffing of the two resulting precincts with an adequate force.

Frequently, he pointed out, the precinct is patrolled by only one scout car because receptions and other official functions in the downtown area require police attention.

In 1933, the force numbered 1,265 men, Brown said, but did not include 51 men detailed to street intersections who were on the street car company pay roll. These men now are on the police roll which numbers 1,391 officers and privates.

Meanwhile, in police court Ellis and Ellsworth Tippett, 20 and 17, respectively, the "drunken bandits," from Ardmore, Md., who in one night staged seven holdups, were held for the grand jury after being arraigned before Judge Hobart Newman on one charge of robbing a filling station at 2651 Benning road northeast.

Unable to make bond of $20,000 each, the brothers were committed to the District Jail. Ellsworth pleaded guilty and Ellis not guilty. Detectives immediately presented six other cases to the grand jury with one charge of assault with intent to kill.

Prosecution of three young colored boys on robbery and abduction charges was assured in District Court when the grand jury returned indictments charging William Nelson, 18, Luther A. Riley, 19, and David Riley, 15, with taking the Rev. Robert C. McMakin, of Avon, N. C., into nearby Maryland and then returning him here.

Senator Bilbo, saying he was hoping to reduce holdups in the District, introduced a bill to permit infliction of the death penalty for armed robbery.

The bill would permit a jury to prescribe the penalty at its discretion or to fix imprisonment at not less than three years.

District Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen declared he "had no fault to find with the Parole Board," and described the board as "very efficient."

"Our great need at the present time is more parole officers," he said. "The Budget Bureau has approved an item involving two additional officers."

24 Seek Paroles.

The names of 24 inmates at Lorton Reformatory, 25 miles south in Virginia, were presented to the board of Wilbur-LaRoe, jr., Frank R. Jelleff and Dr. Emmett J. Scott by Hugh F. Rivers, parole executive, for hearing today.

Those seeking parole are Alma Campbell, John W. Earles, George Taylor, James Easley, Ira B. Moore, Willie D. Rollins, Thomas Bell, Lawrence E. Cook, Cornelius Brown, Leonard Smith, James White, Elmer Southern, James M. Neal, Harold D. Reed, William Hill, Edward Coleman, Bela Stamer, Jesse Jones, John H. Mills, James Henderson, Daniel C. Dixon, Albert Johnson, Christopher C. Evans and James Ford.

Officials at Lorton, meanwhile, were completing arrangements for the transfer back to Atlanta penitentiary of four convicts whose presence in an institution so close to the District had brought widespread protests.

Attorney General Cummings at the request of Ray L. Huff, District penal director, has ordered back to the Georgia prison Charles R. (Rags) Warring and two of his henchmen in the numbers rackets, Joseph S. Bond and Samuel S. Montgomery.

Crime Statistics Given.

Maj. Brown released statistics comparing the records of crimes for the first 17 days of November, December and January.

The first 17 days this month there were 68 robberies, 50 grand larcenies, 87 stolen automobiles, 104 larcenies from parked automobile, 130 housebreakings, and 7 attempted robberies.

Comparable figures for December, when crime reaches a holiday peak, were 84 robberies, 60 grand larcenies, 108 stolen automobiles, 97 larcenies from parked automobiles, 134 housebreakings, and 6 attempted robberies.

"The intelligent and persistent efforts of the police department" in the recovery of $120 worth of school property stolen during 1934 and 1935 was commended yesterday by Superintendent of Schools Frank W. Ballou.

Witness Links Nolan, Jenkins In Fraud Deals

Former Secretary Testifies Same Auto Contracts Sold Twice.

An alleged picture of how the negotiation of more than two score conditional bills of sale contracts were first sold to the Munsey Trust Co. and duplicates sold to the Universal Credit Co. was revealed to a jury in District Court yesterday by James F. Gallagher, former secretary of the Nolan Motor Co.

Gallagher, taking the stand against William J. Nolan and Benjamin D. Jenkins, who are facing accusations that they were guilty of 16 false pretense charges and one of conspiracy to commit false pretenses, said that in the spring of 1936 the motor company, sorely pressed for funds, sought out a scheme for recouping its fortunes.

He said that he, Nolan and Jenkins discussed a scheme for negotiating duplicate sales contracts as one means of raising funds. The prosecution, according to John J. Wilson, claims the company sold the original contracts for automobiles to the Munsey Trust Co., and then sold duplicate contracts for the same automotive units to the Universal Credit Co.

Gallagher, also under indictment, is not now on trial. He was granted a severance from the Nolan-Jenkins trial and has told Wilson he expected to "tell all."

In his statements yesterday, Gallagher stated some of the signatures on the Universal Credit Co. contracts were his, some were Nolan's and others were Jenkins. He admitted he wrote the name of C. B. Ryan, head of two cab companies, to some of the contracts without the consent of Ryan. In some instances, he said, Jenkins, a notary, notarized the signatures.

Cottrell Lists 3 Chief D. C. Needs

Washington's outstanding needs today are national representation, fiscal equity and an adequate auditorium, Robert J. Cottrell, executive secretary of the Washington Board of Trade, told the Advertising Club of Washington at its luncheon at the Raleigh Hotel yesterday.

"There is no use in our growling at Congress and our officials so long as men in the community who should be interested in its general welfare will not give their co-operation and effort toward a united front in the needs of the community," he said.
